CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

In this chapter, the researcher presents conclusions and suggestions for future researchers and also suggestions for teachers.

5.1 Conclusion

The researcher arranges this research with the topic of the learning strategies used by Papuan students who study at Widya Mandala Catholic University. They are the members of the YPMAC scholarship. English is an important international language to learn. It is not an easy thing to learn English, so that many people are still learning the language. In the process of learning English, Papuan students at the Widya Mandala Catholic University sometimes feel bored while studying because there are various kinds of components and different skills. They found it difficult when they have to spell words in English. Therefore, there are various different learning strategies. From this study, it can be concluded that Papuan students use memory strategies more often to learn English. Through the memory strategies, students can listen to songs in English, watch movies and also podcasts in English and then translate the words into their language using Google Translate.

Regarding the second research questions which relates to the challenges of learning English, this study found out that the Papuan students under study lack for interest in learning English so that they could not get more information well in learning English. Usually, they more focused on translating the meaning than receiving information. In addition to that, they also lack for facilities that support English learning. For example, the students Papua students claim that they do not have dictionary book and digital dictionary to find meanings and expressions in English.
