THE BIOGRAPHY OF BERNARD SHAW

George Bernard Shaw was born in Dublin on July 26, 1856. He was the third child and only son. The Shaws were Protestants in a Catholic country, so the boy began life as an outsider. His father, George Carr Shaw, was an impecunious civil servant, a failure in business, and an alcoholic. Shaw's mother, Lucinda Elizabeth Gurly, a cultivated young woman with a beautiful mezzo soprano voice. His mother was a singer who took part in amateur performances. Through her interest, Shaw acquired a culture in music, drama, and painting.

His formal education was limited. He studied Latin grammar privately from an uncle later sent to Wesleyan Connexion School, later known as Wesley College, in Dublin.

Then, Shaw was employed for five years in the office of a Dublin land agent, at a salary which ranged from the equivalent of about $ 90 to $ 240 a year. This work was irksome to one of his temperament, and in 1876, at the age of 20, he threw it up and fled to London to take up a literary career. There he joined his mother, who had left her husband and was earning her own living in that city as a professional music teacher.

Beginning three years after his arrival in London, Shaw made an effort to become a novelist. The first of his novels was Immaturity.

In 1884 Shaw joined the Fabian Society of Moderate Socialist, founded in that year. He became an ardent pamphleteer and a lecturer for the cause of socialism.

Shaw's popularity as an active dramatist began in New York and in Germany in the middle nineties, several activities. In the next year he wrote The Philanderer, a commentary on Ibsenism and the "new woman".

His first play was Widower's Houses (1892), an attack on slum landlordism, a direct outgrowth of his socialist activities. In the next year he wrote Mrs. Warren's Profession at the suggestion of Mrs. Sidney Webb in 1894, but censorship prevented its performance.

In association with Harley Granville-Barker, Mr. Shaw produced Man and Superman in London in 1905. With his position in the theater thoroughly established, Shaw also began turning out new plays. John Bull's other Island, a satire on the land problem in Ireland before autonomy, was a great success. Then come, How He Lied to her Husband, Major Barbara, and Captain Brassbound's Conversion. The following plays followed: The Doctor's Dilemma (1906), The Showing Up of Blanco Posnet (1907) banned by the censor, Getting married (1908), Press Cuttings (1909), The Dark Lady of The Sonnets (1910), Fanny's First Play (1911), OVERRULED (1912), Pygmalion (1912), Androcles and The Lion (1913), Heartbreak House (1914), Back to Methusaleh (1921), and Saint Joan (1921).

In 1925, Shaw received the Nobel Prize for Literature, and turned the prize money over to the Anglo-Swedish Literary alliance.

Shaw took care of his health. He took regular walks and was a "sun worshipper." He was also vegetarian, and an abstainer all his life from liquor and tobacco, which he often made the subject of attack in his plays and other writings.

In September 1950, Shaw's Far-Fetched Fables proved a failure in its presentation.

A fall in his garden on September 10, 1950, when Shaw was ninety-four, resulted in a broken thigh which in turn led to complications resulting in his death on November 2, 1950. His will decreed that he was not to be buried in Westminster Abbey.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PLAY

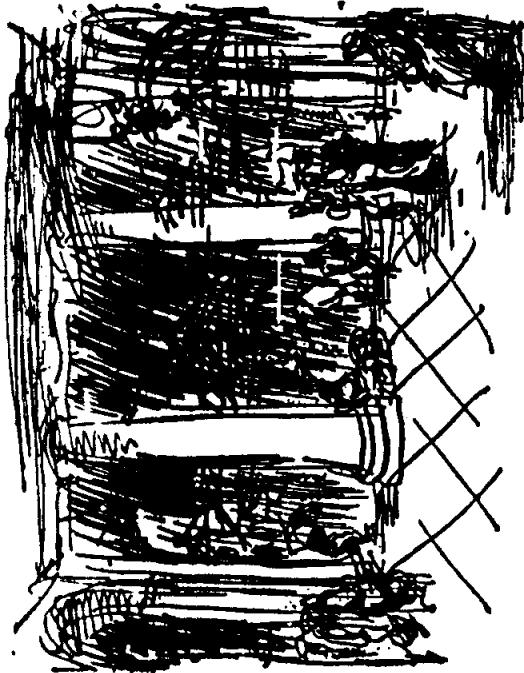

Henry Higgins is an eccentric Professor of Phonetics. He hears Eliza Doolittle, who is a cockney flower girl, speak with an atrocious accent. He makes notes on her speech, Liza and the bystanders taking him to be a policeman. In the crowd is Colonel Pickering, retired India officer, an authority on Indian dialects, who has come to London especially to meet Professor Higgins. Higgins gives Eliza a handful of money to stop her whining, and she leaves in the unaccustomed splendor of a taxi. However, she has heard Higgins say that in three months he could pass her off as a duchess, so the next morning she taxis to his house on Wimpole Street in order to take voice lessons. Pickering bets Higgins all the expenses of Liza's training that he cannot do it. Higgins flatters, cajoles, and threatens her by turns, and finally wins her acceptance of the plan. Alfred Doolittle, her father, a rascally dustman, calls to see what has become of his daughter, but Higgins buys him off with five pounds.

After a period of rigorous training, Liza is sent off to Higgins' mother's home in Chelsea. When she arrives Mrs. Eynsford Hill, her son, Freddy, and daughter, Clara, are calling. Liza, beautifully gowned and speaking with pedantic correctness, sticks to her two topics, the weather and people's health. She gives Freddy a studied account of the former, and his mother a vivid report of her aunt's "doing in." The Eynsford Hill is enchanted with what they believe to be a new kind of small talk. Finally, Higgins presents Liza at the ambassador's ball and wins his bet from Pickering. The two men discuss her so coldly and scientifically that Liza is roused to fury. She throws Higgins' slippers in his face and demands to know what he plans to do with her now. She then takes refuge with Mrs. Higgins, who berates her son for his lack of consideration. When he shows up at his mother's house and asks her to return home with him, they quarrel a little but the audience gets the impression that he will never let her go, even though they do not marry.

Finally, Liza and Higgins will not marry. Liza marries Freddy, and with Colonel Pickering's continued financial support they finally become established in the florist and greengrocer business.

PYGMALION

ACT I

London at 11.15 p.m. Torrents of heavy summer rain. Cab whistles blowing frantically in all directions. Pedestrians running for shelter into the portico of St Paul's church (not Wren's cathedral but Inigo Jones's church in Covent Garden vegetable market), among them a man and his daughter in evening dress. All are peering out gloomily at the rain, except one man with his back turned to the rest, wholly engrossed in a notebook in which he is writing.

This is the opening scene of the play between the central pillars close to the entrance to the church. I'm going to call it to the music. What can Freddy be doing all this time? He's been gone twenty minutes.

PYGMALION

THE MOTHER [c: her daughter's right] Not so long. But he ought to have got us a cab by this time.

A BYSTANDER [on the lady's right] He wont get no cab not until half-past eleven, missus, when they come back after dropping their theatre fares.

THE MOTHER. But we must have a cab. We cant stand here until half-past eleven. It's too bad.

THE DAUGHTER. If Freddy had a bit of gumption, he would have got one at the theatre door.

THE MOTHER. What could he have done, poor boy?

THE DAUGHTER. Other people got cabs. Why couldnt he? Freddy rushes in out of the rain from the Southampton Street side, and comes between them closing a dripping umbrella. He is a young man of twenty, in evening dress, very wet round the ankles.

THE DAUGHTER. Well, havnt you got a cab?

FREDDY. Theres not one to be had for love or money.

THE MOTHER. Oh, Freddy, there must be one. You cant have tried.

THE DAUGHTER. It's too tiresome. Do you expect us to go and get one ourselves?

FREDDY. I tell you they're all engaged. The rain was so sudden: nobody was prepared; and everybody had to take a cab. Ive been to Charing Cross one way and nearly to Ludgate Circus the other; and they were all engaged.

THE MOTHER. Did you try Trafalgar Square?

FREDDY. There wasnt one at Trafalgar Square.

PYGMALION

THE DAUGHTER. Did you try?

FREDDY. I tried as far as Charing Cross Station. Did you expect me to walk to Hammersmith?

THE DAUGHTER. You havnt tried at all.

THE MOTHER. You really are very helpless, Freddy. Go again; and dont come back until you have found a cab.

FREDDY. I shall simply get soaked for nothing.

THE DAUGHTER. And what about us? Are we to stay here all night in this draught, with next to nothing on? You selfish pig—

FREDDY. Oh, very well: I'll go, I'll go. [He opens his umbrella and dashes off. Strandswards, but comes into collision with a flower girl who is hurrying in for shelter, knocking her basket out of her hands. A blinding flash of lightning, followed instantly by a rattling peal of thunder, orchestrates the incident].

THE FLOWER GIRL. Nah than, Freddy: look wh' y' gowin, deah.

FREDDY. Sorry [he rushes off].

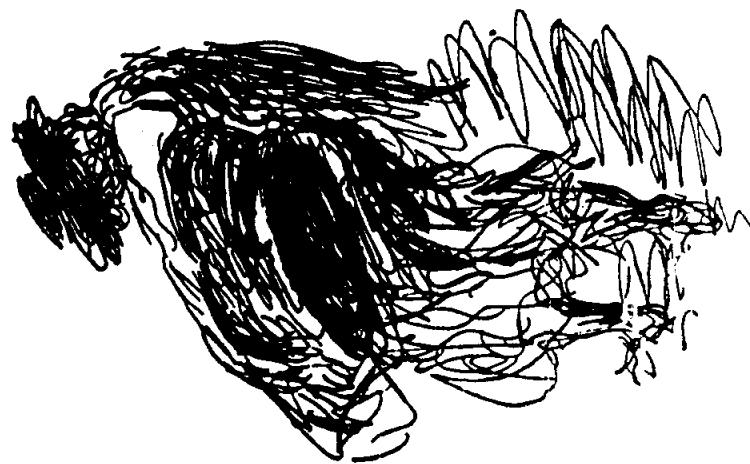

THE FLOWER GIRL [picking up her scattered flowers and replacing them in the basket] Theres manners f' yer! Te-oo banches o' violets trod into the mad. [She sits down on the plinth of the column, sorting her flowers, on the lady's right. She is not at all a romantic figure. She is perhaps eighteen, perhaps twenty, hardly older. She wears a little sailor hat of black straw that has long been exposed to the dust and sun of London and has seldom if ever been brushed. Her hair needs washing rather badly; its mousy colour can hardly be natural. She wears a nicely black coat that reaches nearly to her knees and is smirched to her waist. She has a broad skirt with a criss cross pattern. Her boots are much the same for size. She is not exactly as pretty as you can afford to be; but compared to the ladies she is very pretty. Her features are no worse than theirs; but their condition leaves something to be desired; and she needs the services of a dentist].

THE MOTHER. How do you know that my son's name is Freddy, pray?

PYGMALION

THE FLOWER GIRL. Ow, sez yo-oo san is c' Wal, fewd
d...y'd-o-o-tty bawrnz a mother should, ed now bettern to spawl a pore gal's bahrzn than ran awy athat pyn.
Will yeoo py me off them? [Her, with apologies, this desperate

PYGMALION

THE DAUGHTER. No. I've nothing smaller than sixpence.

THE FLOWER GIRL. [hopefully] I can give you change for a tanner, kind lady.

THE MOTHER [to Clara] Give it to me. [Clara parts reluctantly]. Now [to the girl] This is for your flowers.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Thank you kindly, lady.

THE DAUGHTER. Make her give you the change. These things are only a penny a bunch.

THE MOTHER. Do hold your tongue, Clara. [To the girl] You can keep the change.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Oh, thank you, lady.

THE MOTHER. Now tell me how you know that young gentleman's name.

THE FLOWER GIRL. I didn't. THE MOTHER. I heard you call him by it. Don't try to deceive me.

THE FLOWER GIRL [protesting] Who's trying to deceive you? I called him Freddy or Charlie same as you might yourself if you was talking to a stranger and wished to be pleasant.

THE DAUGHTER. Sixpence thrown away! Really, mamma, you might have spared Freddy that. [She retreats in disgust, behind the pillar].

An elderly gentleman of the amiable military type rushes into the shelter, and closes a dripping umbrella. He is in the same plight as Freddy, very wet about the ankles. He is in evening dress, with a light overcoat. He takes the place left vacant by the daughter.

THE GENTLEMAN. Phew!

THE MOTHER [to the gentleman] Oh, sir, is there any sign of its stopping?

THE GENTLEMAN. I'm afraid not. It started worse than ever about two minutes ago [he gives to the girl beside the flower girl, puts up his foot on it; and stoops to turn down his trouser ends].

THE MOTHER. Oh dear! [She retires sadly and joins her daughter].

attempt to represent her distinct with a romantic affect must be abandoned as unfeeling. The girl beside the flower girl, puts up his foot on it; and stoops to turn down his trouser ends.

THE DAUGHTER. Don't mind it, mamma! The ideal! THE MOTHER. Please allow me, Clara. Have you any pennies?

PYGMALION

THE FLOWER GIRL [taking advantage of the military gentleman's proximity to establish friendly relations with him] If it's worse, it's a sign it's nearly over. So cheer up, Captain; and buy a flower off a poor girl.

PYGMALION

THE GENTLEMAN. I'm sorry. I havnt all, change.

THE FLOWER GIRL. I can give you change, Captain.

THE GENTLEMAN. For a sovereign?
I've nothing less.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Garn! Oh do buy a flower off me, Captain. I can change half-a-crown. Take this for tuppence.

THE GENTLEMAN. Now dont be troublesome: theres a good girl. [Trying his pockets] I really havnt any change - Stop: heres three hapene, if thats any use to you [he returns to the other pillar].

THE FLOWER GIRL [disappointed,
but thinking three halfpences better than nothing] Thank you, sir.

THE BYSTANDER [to the girl]

You be careful: give him a bower for it. Theres a bloke here behind taking down every blessed word youre saying. [All turn to the man who is taking notes].

THE FLOWER GIRL [springing up terrified] I aint done nothing wrong by speaking to the gentleman.
I've a right to sell flowers if I keep off the kerb. [Hysterically]
I'm a respectable girl: so help me, I never spoke to him except to ask him to buy a flower off me.

PYGMALION

General hubbub, mostly sympathetic to the flower girl, but deprecating her exercise sensibility. Cries of Don't start hollerin.

Who's hurting you? Nobody's going to touch you. What's the good of fussing? Steady on. Easy easy, etc., come from the elderly staid spectators, who pat her comfortingly. Less patient ones bid her shut her head, or ask her roughly what is wrong with her. A remoter group, not knowing what the matter is, crowd in and increase the noise with question and answer:

What's the row? What-she-do? Where is he? A tee taking her down. What! him? Yes: him over there: Took money off the gentleman, etc.

THE FLOWER GIRL [breaking through them to the gentleman, crying wildly] Oh, sir, don't let him charge me. You dunno what it means to me. They'll take away my character and drive me on the streets for speaking to gentlemen. They —

THE NOTE TAKER [coming forward on her right, the rest crowding after him] There! there! there! who's hurting you, you silly girl? What do you take me for? THE BYSTANDER. It's awfus; it's a gentleman: look at his books! [Exclaiming to the note taker] She thought you was a copper's nark, sir.

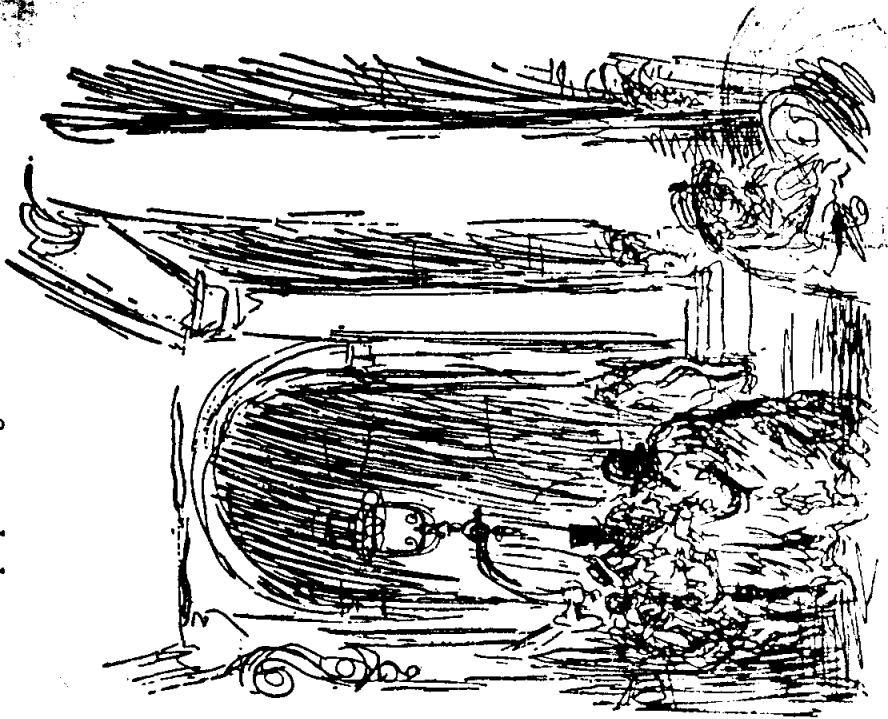

THE NOTE TAKER [with quick interest] What's a copper's mark? THE BYSTANDER I don't know, but I know what a copper's mark is, as well as any. It's just a small coin call it. A sort of informer.

THE FLOWER GIRL [still crying] I never said a word —

THE NOTE TAKER [scoffing] I know, I know, Oh, shut up, shut up. Do I look like a —

PYGMALION

THE FLOWER GIRL [far from reassured] Then what did you take down my words for? How do I know whether you took me down right? You just shew me what you wrote about me. [The note taker opens his book and holds it steadily under her nose, though the pressure of the mob trying to read it over his shoulders would upset a weaker man]. What's that? That ain't proper writing. I can't read that.

PYGMALION

THE NOTE TAKER. I can. [Reads, slurring her pronunciation] 'Cheer up, Kepun; n'baw ya bahr or a pore gal.'

THE FLOWER GIRL [much distressed] It's because I called him Captain. I meant no harm. [To the gentleman] Oh, sir, don't let him lay a charge agen me for a word like that. You — THE GENTLEMAN. Charge! I make no charge. [To the note taker] Reauv, sir, if you are a detective, you need not begin protecting me against molestation by young women until I ask you. Anybody could see that the girl meant no harm. THE BYSTANDERS GENERALLY [demonstrating against police espionage] Course they could. What business is it of yours? You mind your own affairs. He wants promotion, he does. Taking down people's words! Girl never said a word to him. What harm if she did? Nice thing a girl cant shelter from the rain without being insulted, etc., etc., etc. [She is conducted by the more sympathetic demonstrators back to her plinth, where she resumes her seat and struggles with her emotion].

THE BYSTANDER. He aint a tec. He's a blooming busy-body: that's what he is. I tell you, look at his ba-oots.

THE NOTE TAKER [turning on him genially] And how are all your people down at Selsey?

THE BYSTANDER [suspiciously] Who told you my people come from Selsey?

THE NOTE TAKER. Never you mind. They did. [To the girl] How do you come to be up so far east? You were born in Lissom Grove.

THE FLOWER GIRL [surprised] Oh, what harm is there in my living Lissom Grove? It wasn't for a pug to live in; and I had to pay four-and-six a week. [In a whisper] Oh, I — I — I —

PYGMALION

THE NOTE TAKER. Live where you like; but stop that noise.

THE GENTLEMAN [to the girl] Come, come! he can't touch you: you have a right to live where you please.

A SARCASTIC BYSTANDER [thrusting himself between the note taker and the gentleman] Park Lane, for instance. I'd like to go into the Housing Question with you, I would.

THE FLOWER GIRL [subsiding into a brooding melancholy over her basket, and talking very low-spiritedly to herself] I'm a good girl, I am.

THE SARCASTIC BYSTANDER [not attending to her] Do you know where I come from?

THE NOTE TAKER [promptly] Horton. Titterings. Popular interest in the note taker's performance increases.

THE SARCASTIC ONE [amazed] Well, who said I didn't? By me! you know everything, you do.

THE FLOWER GIRL [still nursing her sense of injury] Aint no call to meddle with me, he aint.

PYGMALION

THE FLOWER GIRL. Let him say what he likes. I don't want to have no truck with him.

THE BYSTANDER. You take us for dirt under your feet, don't you? Catch you taking liberties with a gentleman!

THE SARCISTIC BYSTANDER. Yes: tell him where he come from if you want to go fortune-telling.

THE NOTE TAKER. Cheltenham, Harrow, Cambridge, and India.

THE GENTLEMAN. Quite right.

Great laughter. Reaction in the note taker's favor. Exclamations of He knows all about it! Told him proper. Hear him tell the toff where he come from? etc.

THE GENTLEMAN. May I ask, sir, do you do this for your living at a music hall?

THE NOTE TAKER. I've thought of that. Perhaps I shall some day.

The rain has stopped; and the persons on the outside of the crowd begin to drop off.

THE FLOWER GIRL. [Presenting the reaction] He's no gentleman, he aint, to interfere with a poor girl.

THE DAUGHTER [out of patience, pushing her way rudely to the front and displacing the gentleman, who politely retires to the other side of the pillar] What on earth is Freddy doing? I shall get pneumonia if I stay in this draught any longer.

THE NOTE TAKER [to himself, hastily making a note of her pronunciation of 'monia'] Earlscourt.

THE DAUGHTER [violently] Will you please keep your impertinent remarks to yourself.

THE NOTE TAKER. Did I say that out loud? I didn't mean to. I beg your pardon. Your mother's Epsom, unmissable.

THE MOTHER [advancing between the daughter and the note taker] How very curious! I was brought up in Largelady Park, near Epsom.

THE NOTE TAKER [uproariously amused] Ha! ha! What a devil of a name! Excuse me. [To the daughter] You want a cab, do you?

PYGMALION

THE DAUGHTER. Dont dare speak to me.

THE MOTHER. Oh please, please, Clara. [Her daughter repudiates her with an angry string and retires huffily] We should be so grateful to you, sir, if you found us a cab. [The note taker produces a whistle]. Oh, thank you. [She joins her daughter].

The note taker blows a piercing blast.

THE SARCISTIC BYSTANDER. There! I knew he was a plain-clothes copper.

THE BYSTANDER. That aint a police whistle: that's a sporting whistle.

THE FLOWER GIRL. [still preoccupied with her wounded feelings] He's no right to take away my character. My character is the same to me as any lady's.

THE NOTE TAKER. I dont know whether youve noticed it; but the rain stopped about two minutes ago.

THE BYSTANDER. So it has. Why didnt you say so before? and us losing our time listening to your silliness! [He walks off towards the Strand].

THE SARCISTIC BYSTANDER. I can tell where you come from. You come from Anwell. Go back there.

THE NOTE TAKER [helpfully] Hanwell.

THE SARCISTIC BYSTANDER [Effecting great distinction of speech] Thank you, teacher. Haw haw! So long [he turns his hat with much respect and straightens it].

THE FLOWER GIRL. Frightening people like that! How would he like it himself?

THE MOTHER. It's quite fine now, Clara. We can walk to a motor bus. Come. [She gathers her skirts above her ankles and hurries off towards the Strand].

THE DAUGHTER. But the cab - [her mother is out of hearing].

Oh, how tiresome! [She follows angrily].

All the rest have gone except the note taker, the gentleman, and the flower girl, who sits arranging her basket, and still biting herself in marmars.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Poor girl! Hard enough for her to live without being worried and chivied.

THE GENTLEMAN [returning to his former place on the side of the girl's left] How do you do it, if I may ask?

THE NOTE TAKER. Simply phonetics. The science of speech. That's my profession: also my hobby. Happy is the man who can make a living by his hobby! You can spot an Irishman or a Yorkshireman by his brogue. I can place any man within six miles. I can place him within two miles in London. Sometimes within two streets.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Ought to be ashamed of himself, unmanly coward!

THE GENTLEMAN. But is there a living in that?

THE NOTE TAKER. Oh, yes. Quite a fat one. This is an age of upstarts. Men begin in Kentish Town with £80 a year, and end in Park Lane with a hundred thousand.

They want to drop Kentish Town; but they give themselves away every time they open their mouths. Now I can teach them—

THE FLOWER GIRL. Let him mind his own business and leave a poor girl—

THE NOTE TAKER [exploratively] Woman: cease this detestable loathooing instantly; or else seek the shelter of some other place of worship.

THE FLOWER GIRL [with feeble defiance] I've a right to be here if I like, same as you.

THE NOTE TAKER. A woman who utters such depressing and disgusting sounds has no right to be anywhere — no right to live. Remember that you are a human being with a soul and the divine gift of articulate speech: that your native language is the language of Shakespeare and

PYGMALION

Milton and The Bible; and don't sit there crooning like a bilious pigeon.

THE FLOWER GIRL [quite overwhelmed, looking up at him in mingled wonder and depreciation without daring to raise her head] Ah-ah-ah! om-ow-oo!

THE NOTE TAKER [whipping out his book] Heavens! what a sound! [He writes; then holds up the book and reads, reproaching her voice's scratch] Ab-ab-ab-ab-ab-ab-o-o!

THE FLOWER GIRL [killed by his performance, and laughing in spite of herself] Garn! THE NOTE TAKER. You see this creature with her herb-stone English: the English that will keep her in the gutter to the end of her days. Well, sir, in three months I could pass that girl off as a duchess at an ambassador's garden party. I could even get her a place as lady's maid or shop assistant, which requires better English.

THE FLOWER GIRL. What's that you say?

THE NOTE TAKER. Yes, you squashed cabbage leaf, you disgrace to the noble architecture of these columns, you incarnate insult to the English language: I could pass you off as the Queen of Sheba. [To the Gentleman] Can you believe that?

THE GENTLEMAN. Of course I can. I am myself a student of Indian dialects; and —

THE NOTE TAKER [eagerly] Are you? Do you know Col. Pickering, the author of Spoken Sanscrit?

THE GENTLEMAN. I am Colonel Pickering. Who are you?

THE NOTE TAKER. Henry Higgins, author of Higgins's Universal Alphabet.

PICKERING [with enthusiasm], I came from India to meet you. HIGGINS. I was going to India to meet you.

PICKERING. Where do you live?

HIGGINS. 27A Wimpole Street. Come and see me to-morrow.

PICKERING. I'm at the Carlton. Come with me now and lets have a jaw over some supper.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. Right you are.
 THE FLOWER GIRL [to Pickering, as he passes her] Buy a flower, kind gentleman. I'm short for my lodgings.
 PICKERING. I really havnt any change. I'm sorry [he goes away].

HIGGINS [sheeted at the girl's mentality] Liza. You said you could change half-a-crown.
 THE FLOWER GIRL [rising in despair] You ought to be stuffed with nails, you ought. [Flinging the basket at his feet] Take the whole blooming basket for sixpence.

HIGGINS [hearing in it the voice of God, rebutting him for his Pharisaic wants of charity to the poor girl] A reminder. [He turns back like the second quartet.]

PICKERING. I really havnt any change. I'm sorry [he goes away].

PYGMALION

FREDDY [springing out of a taxi] Got one at last. Hall! [To the girl] Where are the two ladies that were here?
 THE FLOWER GIRL. They walked to the bus when the rain stopped.

FREDDY. And left me with a cab on my hands! Damnation!

THE FLOWER GIRL [with grandfather] Never mind, young man. I'm going home in a taxi. [She sails off to the cab. The driver puts his hand behind him and关着 the door firmly shut against her. Quite understanding his mistrust, she steals him her handful of money]. A taxi fare aint no object to me, Charlie. [He grins and opens the door]. Here. What about the basket?

THE TAXIMAN. Give it here. Tuppence extra.
 LIZA. No: I dont want nobody to see it. [She crushes it into the cab and gets in, continuing the conversation through the window] Goodbye, Freddy.

FREDDY [dazzled raising his hat] Goodbye.
 TAXIMAN. Where to?

LIZA. Bucknam Pelis [Buckingham Palace].

TAXIMAN. What d'ye mean - Bucknam Pelis?

LIZA. Dont you know where it is? In the Green Park, where the King lives. Goodbye, Freddy. Dont let me keep you standing there. Goodbye:

FREDDY. Goodbye. [He goes].

TAXIMAN. Here? Whats this about Bucknam Pelis? What business have you at Bucknam Pelis?

LIZA. Of course I havnt none. But I wasnt going to let him know that. You drive me home.

TAXIMAN. And wheres home?

LIZA. Angel Court, Brumy Lane, next Micklejohn's oil shop. TAXIMAN. That sounds more like it, Judy. [He drives off].

Lo, and as the taxi drove out of the entrance to Angel Court, a narrow little arched street between two shops, one of them Micklejohn's oil shop. When it stops there, Eliza gets out, crossing the road with her.

PYGMALION

LIZA. How much?

TAXIMAN [indicating the taximeter] Can't you read? A shilling.

LIZA. A shilling for two min. ones!

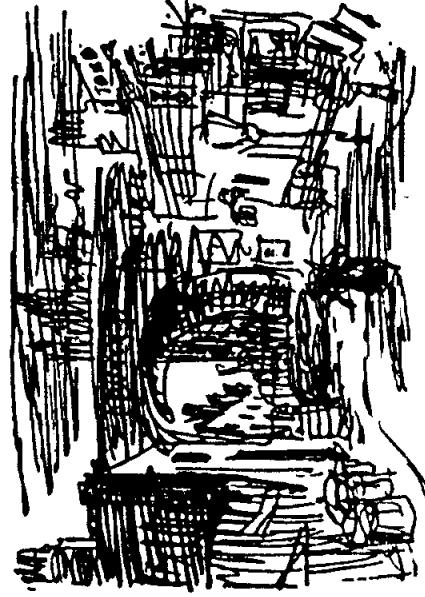

TAXIMAN. Two minutes or ten: it's all the same.

LIZA. Well, I don't call it right.

TAXIMAN. Ever been in a taxi before?

LIZA. [with dignity] Hundreds and thousands of times, young man.

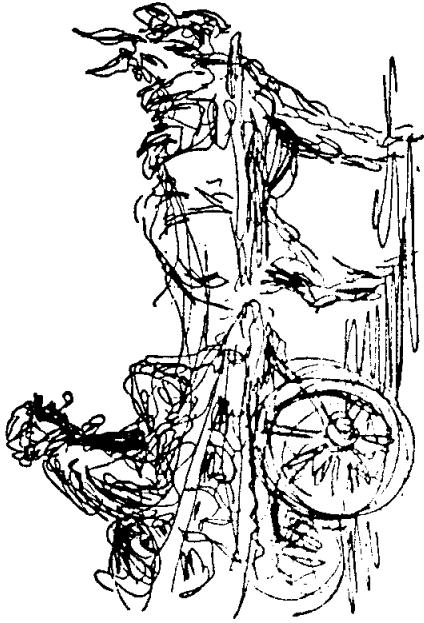

TAXIMAN [laughing at her] Good for you, Judy. Keep the

The rest is the irreducible minimum of poverty's needs: a wretched bed heaped with all sorts of coverings that have any warmth in them, a draped packing case with a basin and jug on it and a little looking glass over it, a chair and table, the refectory of some suburban kitchen, and an American alarm clock on the shelf above the unashed fireplace: the whole lighted with a gas lamp with a penny in the slot meter. Rent: four shillings a week.

Here Eliza, chronically weary, but too excited to go to bed sits, counting her new riches and dreaming and planning what to do with them, until the gas goes out, when she enjoys for the first time the sensation of being able to put in another penny without grudging it. This prodigal mood does not extinguish her gnawing sense of the need for economy sufficiently to prevent her from calculating that she can dream and plan in bed more cheaply and warmly than sitting up without a fire. So she takes off her shawl and skirt and adds them to the miscellaneous bedclothes. Then she kicks off her shoes and gets into bed without any further change.

shilling, darling, with best love from all at home. Good luck! [He drives off].

LIZA [humiliated] Impudent! She picks up the basket and trudges up the alley with it to her lodgings, a small room actually filled with paper hanging loose in the dining room. A framed portrait of a man, mounted with paper. A portrait of a particular sort, and a picture of her father, Mr. Higgins, in a top hat. A photograph of a man, a newspaper, are pinned up on the wall. A horseshoe hangs in the window; but its tenant died long ago: it remains as a memorial.

by a grand piano, with the keyboard at the end furthest from the door, and a bench for the player extending the full length of the keyboard. On the piano is a dessert dish heaped with fruits and sweets, mostly chocolates.

The middle of the room is clear. Besides the easy-chair, the piano bench, and two chairs at the phonograph table, there is one spring chair. It stands near the fireplace. On the walls, engravings: mostly Piranesi and mezzotint portraits. No paintings.

Pickering is seated at the table, putting down some cards and a tuning-fork which he has been using. Higgins is standing up near him, closing two or three file drawers which are hanging out. He appears in the morning light as a robust, vital, appetizing sort of man of forty or thereabouts, dressed in a professional-looking black frock-coat with a white linen collar and black silk tie. He is of the energetic, scientific type, heartily, even violently interested in every thing that can be studied as a scientific subject, and careless about himself and other people, including their feelings. He is, in fact, but for his years and size, rather like a very impetuous baby 'taking notice' eagerly and loudly, and requiring almost as much watching to keep him out of unintended mischief. His manner varies from genial bullying when he is in a good humor to stormy pertinacity when anything goes wrong; but he is so entirely frank and void of malice that he remains likeable even in his least reasonable moments.

HIGGINS [as he shuts the last drawer] Well, I think that's the whole show.

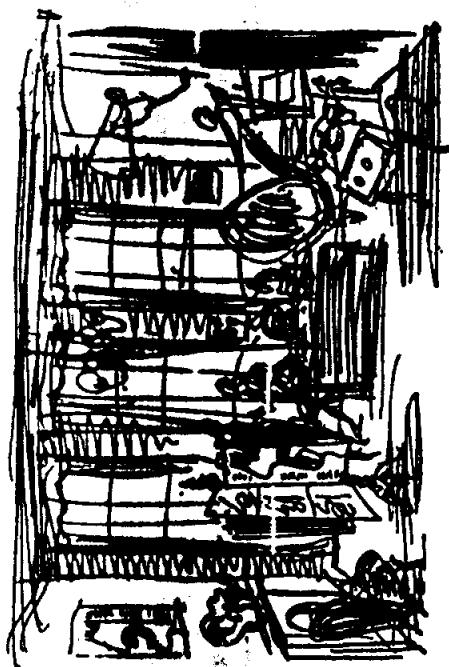

PICKERING. It's really amazing. I havn't taken half of it in, you know.

HIGGINS. Would you like to go over any of it again?

PICKERING [rising and coming to the fireplace, where he plants himself with his back to the fire] No, thank you: not now. I'm quite done up for this morning.

HIGGINS [following him, and standing beside him on his left] Tired of listening to sounds?

PICKERING. Yes. It's a fearful strain. I rather fancied

Next day at 11 a.m. Higgins's laboratory in Wimpole Street. It is a room on the first floor, looking on the street, and was meant for the drawing room. The double doors are in the middle of the back wall; and persons entering find in the corner to their right two tall file cabinets at right angles to one another against the walls. In this corner stands a flat writing-table, on which are a phonograph, a laryngoscope, a row of tiny organ pipes with a bellows, a set of lamp chimneys for singing flames with burners attached to a gas plug in the wall by an indiarubber tube, several tuning-forks of different sizes, a life-size image of half a human head, shaving in section the vocal organs, and a box containing a supply of wax cylinders for the phonograph.

Further down the room, on the same side, is a fireplace, with a comfortable, otherwise-occupied easy-chair at the side of the hearth nearest the door, and a coal-scuttle. There is a clock on the mantelpiece. Between the two windows, the greater part of the right-hand wall is a stand for newspapers. On the other side of the central door, to the left of the visitor, is a cabinet of shallow drawers. On it is a telephone and the telephone receiver. The corner beyond, and most of the side wall, is occupied but you keep on listening, and presently you find they're all as different as A from B. [Mrs Pearce looks in: she is Higgins's housekeeper.] What's the matter?

MRS PEARCE [hesitating, evidently perturbed] A young woman asks to see you, sir.

HIGGINS A young woman! What does she want?
MRS PEARCE Well, sir, she says you'll be glad to see her when you know what she's come about. She's quite a common girl, sir. Very common indeed. I should have sent her away, only I thought perhaps you wanted her to talk into your machines. I hope I've not done wrong; but really you see such queer people sometimes - you'll excuse me, I'm sure, sir -

HIGGINS Oh, that's all right, Mrs Pearce. Has she an interesting accent?

MRS PEARCE Oh, something dreadful, sir, really. I don't know how you can take an interest in it.

HIGGINS [to Pickering] Let's have her up. Show her up, Mrs Pearce [he rushes across to his working table and picks out a cylinder to use on the phonograph].

MRS PEARCE [only half resigned to it] Very well, sir. It's for you to say. [She goes downstairs.]

HIGGINS This is rather a bit of luck. I'll show you how I make records. We'll set her talking, and I'll take it down first in Bell's Visible Speech, then in Broad Romic, and then we'll get her on the phonograph so that you can turn her on as often as you like with the written transcript before you.

MRS PEARCE [returning] This is the young woman, sir.
HIGGINS [chuckling, and going over to the piano to eat sweets] Oh, that comes with practice. You hear no difference at first;

The flower girl enters in state. She has a hat with three ostrich feathers, orange, sky-blue, and red. She has a nearly clean apron and the shoddy coat has been tidied a little. The pathos of this deplorable figure, with its innocent vanity and consequential air, touches Pickering, who has already straightened himself in

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [brusquely, recognizing her with un concealed disappointment, and at once, babylike, making an 'inconceivable grievance of it'] Why, this is the girl I jotted down last night. She's no use: I've got all the records I want of the Elision Grove Higgins and I'm not going to waste another cylinder on it. [To the girl] Be off with you: I don't want you.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Don't you be so saucy. You aint heard what I come for yet. [To Mrs Pearce, who is waiting at the door for further instructions] Did you tell him I come in a taxi?

MRS PEARCE. Nonsense, girl! what do you think a gentleman like Mr Higgins cares what you came in?

THE FLOWER GIRL. Oh, we are proud! He aint above giving lessons, not him: I heard him say so. Well, I aint come here to ask for any compliment; and if my money's not good enough I can go elsewhere.

HIGGINS. Good enough for what?

THE FLOWER GIRL. Good enough for ya-oo. Now you know, dont you? I'm come to have lessons, I am. And to pay for em ta-oo: make no mistake.

HIGGINS [startled] Well!!! [Recovering his breath with a gasp] What do you expect me to say to you?

THE FLOWER GIRL. Well, if you was a gentleman, you might ask me to sit down, I think. Dont I tell you I'm bringing you business?

HIGGINS. Pickering: shall we ask this baggage to sit down, or shall we throw her out of the window?

THE FLOWER GIRL [running away in terror to the piano, where she turns at bay] Ah-ah-oh-ow-ow-oo! I'm bound and determined! I won't be called a bairrage when I've offered to pay like any lady.

Mrs Pearce, the tea can stare at her from the other side of the room, amazed.

PICKERING [genuinely] But what is it you want?

THE FLOWER GIRL. I want to be a lady in a flower shop instead of sellin' at the corner of Tottenham Court Road.

the presence of Mrs Pearce. But as to Higgins, the only distinction he makes between men and women is that when he is neither bullying nor exclaiming to the heavens against some feather-weight cross, he coaxes women as a child coaxes its nurse when it wants to get anything out of her.

PYGMALION

But they won't take me unless I can talk more genteel. Higgins said he could teach me. Well, here I am ready to pay him — not asking any favor — and he treats me as if I was dirt.

MRS PEARCE. How can you be such a foolish ignorant girl as to think you could afford to pay Mr Higgins?

THE FLOWER GIRL. Why should I? If I know what lessons cost as well as you do; and I'm ready to pay.

HIGGINS. How much?

THE FLOWER GIRL. [coming back to him, triumphantly] Now you're talking! I thought you'd come off it when you saw a chance of getting back a bit of what you chucked at me last night. [Confidentially] You'd had a drop in, hadn't you?

HIGGINS. [peremptorily] Sit down.

THE FLOWER GIRL. Oh, if you're going to make a compliment of it —

HIGGINS. [thundering at her] Sit down.

MRS PEARCE. [secretly] Sit down, girl. Do as you're told. THE FLOWER GIRL. Ah-ah-ah-ow-ow-oo! [She stands, half-rebellious, half-hampered].

PICKERING. [very courteous] Won't you sit down? [He places the easy chair near the heartstring between himself and Higgins.] LIZA. [anxiously] Don't mind if I do. [She sits down. Pickering returns to the heartstring].

HIGGINS. What's your name?

THE FLOWER GIRL. Liza Doolittle.

HIGGINS. [whispering, to Higgins] Eliza, Eliza, Bess, Bess,

They went to the woods to get a bird's nest:
HIGGINS. They found a nest with four eggs in it:
HIGGINS. They took one apiece, and left three in it.
THE FLOWER GIRL. With hearty at their own fun

LIZA. Oh, don't be silly.

MRS PEARCE. [placing herself behind Eliza's chair] You must speak to the gentleman like that.

LIZA. Well, why won't he speak sensible to me?

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. Come back to business. How much do you propose to pay me for the lessons?

LIZA. Oh, I know what's right. A lady friend of mine gets French lessons for eighteenpence an hour from a real French gentleman. Well, you wouldn't have the face to ask me the same for teaching me my own language as you would for French; so I won't give more than a shilling. Take it or leave it.

HIGGINS. [walking up and down the room, rattling his keys and his cash in his pockets] You know, Pickering, if you consider a shilling, not as a simple shilling, but as a percentage of this girl's income, it works out as fully equivalent to sixty or seventy guineas from a millionaire.

PICKERING. How so?

HIGGINS. Figure it out. A millionaire has about £150 a day. She earns about half-a-crown.

LIZA. [haughtily] Who told you I only —

HIGGINS. [continuing] She offers me two-fifths of her day's income for a lesson. Two-fifths of a millionaire's income for a day would be somewhere about £60. It's handsome. By George, it's enormous! it's the biggest offer I ever had.

LIZA. [rising, terrified] Sixty pounds! What are you talking about? I never offered you sixty pounds. Where would I get —

HIGGINS. Hold your tongue.

LIZA. [weeping] But I aint got sixty pounds. Oh —

MRS PEARCE. Dont cry, you silly girl. Sit down. Nobody is going to touch your money.

HIGGINS. Somebody is going to touch you, with a broomstick, if you dont stop snivelling. Sit down.

LIZA. [bursting into tears] Ah-ah-ah-ow-oo-o! One would think you was my father.

HIGGINS. If I choose to teach you, I'll be worse than two fathers to you. Here [he offers her his silk handkerchief]!

LIZA. What's this for?

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. To wipe your eyes. To wipe any part of your face that feels moist. Remember: that's your handkerchief; and that's your sleeve. Don't mistake the one for the other if you wish to become a lady in a shop.

LIZA, slightly bewildered, stares helplessly at him.

MRS PEARCE. It's no use talking to her like that, Mr Higgins: she doesn't understand you. Besides, you're quite wrong: she doesn't do it that way at all [she takes the handkerchief].

LIZA [snatching it] Here! You give me that handkerchief. He gave it to me, not to you.

PICKERING [laughing] He did. I think it must be regarded as her property, Mrs Pearce.

MRS PEARCE [resigning herself] Serve you right, Mr Higgins. PICKERING. Higgins! I'm interested. What about the ambassador's garden party? I'll say you're the greatest teacher alive if you make that good. I'll bet you all the expenses of the experiment you can't do it. And I'll pay for the lessons.

LIZA. Oh, you are real good. Thank you, Captain.

HIGGINS [tempted, looking at her] It's almost irresistible. She's so deliciously low - so horribly dirty -

LIZA [protesting extremely] Ah-ah-ah-ah-ow-ow-oo-oo!! I ain't dirty! I washed my face and hands afore I come, I did.

PICKERING. You're certainly not going to turn her head with flattery, Higgins.

MRS PEARCE [uneasy] Oh, don't say that, sir: there's more ways than one of turning a girl's head, and nobody can do it better than Mr Higgins, though he may not always mean it. I do hope, sir, you won't encourage him to do anything foolish.

HIGGINS [becoming exasperated at Liza's strong language] What is life but a series of inspired follies? The difficulty is to find them to do. Never lose a chance; in decent every day I shall make a duchess of this draggled, gaunt, scurvy wench.

LIZA [strongly depreciating this view of her] Ah-ah-ah-ow-ow-oo!

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [carried away] Yes: in six months - in three if she has a good ear and a quick tongue - I'll take her anywhere and pass her off as anything. We'll start today: now! this moment! Take her away and clean her, Mrs Pearce. Monkey Brand, if it won't come off any other way. Is there a good fire in the kitchen?

MRS PEARCE [protesting] Yes; but -

HIGGINS [storming on] Take all her clothes off and burn them. Ring up Whiteley or somebody for new ones. Wrap her up in brown paper til they come.

LIZA. You're no gentleman, you're not, to talk of such things. I'm a good girl, I am; and I know what the like of you are, I do.

HIGGINS. We want none of your Lissen Grove prudery here, young woman. You've got to learn to behave like a duchess. Take her away, Mrs Pearce. If she gives you any trouble, wallop her.

LIZA [springing up and running between Pickering and Mrs Pearce for protection] No! I'll call the police, I will.

MRS PEARCE. But I've no place to put her.

HIGGINS. Put her in the dustbin.

LIZA. Ah-ah-ah-ow-ow-oo!

PICKERING. Oh come, Higgins! be reasonable.

MRS PEARCE [resolutionly] You must be reasonable, Mr Higgins: really you must. You can't walk over everybody like this.

Higgins, thus scolded, subsides. The hurricane is succeeded by a zephyr of amiable surprise.

HIGGINS [with professional exquisiteness of modulation] I walk over everybody! My dear Mrs Pearce, my dear Pickering, I never had the slightest intention of walking over anyone. All I propose is that we should be kind to this poor girl. We must help her to prepare and fit herself for her new station in life. If I did not express myself clearly it was because I did not wish to hurt her delicacy, or yours.

PYGMALION

Liza, reassured, steals back to her chair.

MRS PEARCE [to Pickering] Well, did you ever hear anything like that, sir?

PICKERING [laughing heartily] Never, Mrs Pearce: never.

HIGGINS [seriously] What's the matter?

MRS PEARCE. Well, the matter is, sir, that you can't take a girl up like that as if you were picking up a pebble on the beach.

HIGGINS. Why not?

MRS PEARCE. Why not! But you don't know anything about her. What about her parents? She may be married.

LIZA. Garn!

HIGGINS. There! As the girl very properly says, Garn! Married indeed! Don't you know that a woman of that class looks a worn out drudge of fifty a year after she's married? LIZA. Who'd marry me?

HIGGINS [suddenly resorting to the most thrillingly beautiful low tones in his best eloquent style] By George, Eliza, the streets will be strewn with the bodies of men shooting themselves for your sake before I've done with you.

MRS PEARCE. Nonsense, sir. You mustn't talk like that to her. LIZA [rising and squaring herself determinedly] I'm going away. He's off his chump, he is. I don't want no balmies teaching me.

HIGGINS [wounded in his tenderest point by her insensibility to his eloquence] Oh, indeed! I'm mad, am I? Very well, Mrs Pearce: you needn't order the new clothes for her. Throw her out.

MRS PEARCE. You got no right to touch me. LIZA [going to door] This way, Mrs. Pearce.

LIZA [coming in tears] I didn't want no clothes. I wouldn't have come from the lavoirs au fil de la matinée. I can buy my own clothes.

HIGGINS [going, retreating the handkerchief and intercepting her on her reluctant way to the door] You're an ungrateful wicked girl. This is my return for offering to take you out of the gutter and dress you beautifully and make a lady of you. MRS PEARCE. Stop, Mr Higgins. I won't allow it. It's you that are wicked. Go home to your parents, girl; and tell them to take better care of you.

LIZA. I aint got no parents. They told me I was big enough to earn my own living and turned me out.

MRS PEARCE. Where's your mother?

LIZA. I aint got no mother. Her that turned me out was my sixth stepmother. But I done without them. And I'm a good girl, I am.

HIGGINS. Very well, then, what on earth is all this fuss about? The girl doesn't belong to anybody - is no use to anybody but me. [He goes to Mrs Pearce and begins coaxing.] You can adopt her, Mrs Pearce: I'm sure a daughter would be a great amusement to you. Now dont make any more fuss. Take her downstairs; and -

MRS PEARCE. But what's to become of her? Is she to be paid anything? Do be sensible, sir.

HIGGINS. Oh, pay her whatever is necessary: put it down in the housekeeping book. [Impatiently] What on earth will she want with money? She'll have her food and her clothes. She'll only drink if you give her money.

LIZA [turning on him] Oh you are a brute. It's a lie: nobody ever saw the sign of liquor on me. [To Pickering] Oh, sir: you're a gentleman: dont let him speak to me like that.

PICKERING [in good-humored remonstrance] Does it occur to you, Higgins, that the girl has some feelings?

HIGGINS [looking critically at her] Oh no, I don't think so.

Not any feelings that we need bother about. [Cheerfully] Have you, Eliza?

LIZA. I got my feelings same as anyone else.

HIGGINS [to Pickering, reflectively] You see the difficulty?

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. To get her to talk grammar. The mere pronunciation is easy enough.

LIZA. I don't want to talk grammar. I want to talk like a lady in a flower-shop.

MRS PEARCE. Will you please keep to the point, Mr Higgins. I want to know on what terms the girl is to be here. Is she to have any wages? And what is to become of her when you've finished your teaching? You must work ahead a little.

HIGGINS [impatiently] What's to become of her if I leave her in the gutter? Tell me that, Mrs Pearce.

MRS PEARCE. That's her own business, not yours, Mr Higgins. HIGGINS. Well, when I've done with her, we can throw her back into the gutter; and then it will be her own business again; so that's all right.

LIZA. Oh, you've no feeling heart in you: you don't care for nothing but yourself. [She rises and takes the floor resolutely]. Here! I've had enough of this. I'm going [making for the door]. You ought to be ashamed of yourself, you ought.

HIGGINS [scratching a chocolate cream from the piano, his eyes suddenly beginning to twinkle with mischief] Have some chocolates, Eliza.

LIZA [halting, tempted] How do I know what might be in them? I've heard of girls being drugged by the like of you.

HIGGINS whips out his penknife; cuts a chocolate in two; puts one half into his mouth and bolts it; and offers her the other half.

HIGGINS. Pledge of good faith, Eliza. I eat one half: you eat the other. [Liza opens her mouth to retort: he pops the half chocolate into it]. You shall have boxes of them, barrels of them, every day. You shall live on them. Eh?

LIZA [who has disposed of the chocolate after being nearly choked by it] I wouldn't have ate it, only I'm too lady-like to take it out of my mouth.

HIGGINS. Listen, Eliza. I think you said you came in a taxi.

LIZA. Well, what if I did? I've as good a right to take a taxi as anyone else.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. You have, Eliza; and in future you shall have as many taxis as you want. You shall go up and down and round the town in a taxi every day. Think of that, Eliza.

MRS PEARCE. Mr Higgins: your tempting the girl. It's not right. She should think of the future.

HIGGINS. At her age! Nonsense! Time enough to think of the future when you havn't any future to think of. No, Eliza: do as this lady does: think of other people's futures; but never think of your own. Think of chocolates, and taxis, and gold, and diamonds.

LIZA. No: I don't want no gold, and no diamonds. I'm a good girl, I am. [She sits down again, with an attempt at dignity].

HIGGINS. You shall remain so, Eliza, under the care of Mrs Pearce. And you shall marry an officer in the Guards, with a beautiful moustache: the son of a marquis, who will disinherit him for marrying you, but will relent when he sees your beauty and goodness -

PICKERINO. Excuse me, Higgins; but I really must interfere. Mrs Pearce is quite right. If this girl is to put herself in your hands for six months for an experiment in teaching, she must understand thoroughly what she's doing.

HIGGINS. How can she? She's incapable of understanding anything. Besides, do any of us understand what we are doing? If we did, would we ever do it?

PICKERINO. Very clever, Higgins; but not to the present point. [To Eliza] Miss Doolittle -

LIZA [startled] Ah-ah-oo!

HIGGINS. There! That's all you'll get out of Eliza. Ah-ah-ow-oo! Now use explaining. As a military man you ought to know that. Give her her orders: that's enough for her.

Eliza: you are to live here for the next six months, learning how to speak beautifully, like a lady in a florist's shop. If you're good and do whatever you're told, you shall sleep in a proper bedroom, and have lots to eat, and money to buy chocolates and take rides in taxis. If you're naughty and idle you will sleep in the back kitchen among the black beetles, and be walloped by Mrs Pearce with a broomstick. At the end of six months you shall go to Buxtingham Palace in a carriage, beautifully dressed. If the King finds out you're not a lady, you will be taken by the police to the Tower of London, where your head will be cut off as a warning to other presumptuous flower girls. If you are not found out, you shall have a present of seven-and-sixpence to start life with as a lady in a shop. If you refuse this offer you will be a most ungrateful wicked girl; and the angels will weep for you. [To Pickering] Now are you satisfied, Pickering? [To Mrs Pearce] Can I put it more plainly and fairly, Mrs Pearce?

PYGMALION

MRS PEARCE [patiently] I think you'd better let me speak to the girl properly in private. I don't know that I can take charge of her or consent to the arrangement at all. Of course I know you don't mean her any harm; but when you get what you call interested in people's accents, you never think or care what may happen to them or you. Come with me, Eliza.

HIGGINS. That's all right. Thank you, Mrs Pearce. Bundle her off to the bathroom.

LIZA [rising reluctantly and suspiciously] You're a great bully, you are. I won't stay here if I don't like. I won't let nobody wallop me. I never asked to go to Bucknam Pellis, I didn't. I was never in trouble with the police, not me. I'm a good girl—

MRS PEARCE. Don't answer back, girl. You don't understand the gentleman. Come with me. [She leads the way to the door, and holds it open for Eliza].

LIZA [as she goes out] Well, what I say is right. I won't go near the King, not if I'm going to have my head cut off. If I'd known what I was letting myself in for, I wouldn't have come here. I always been a good girl; and I never offered to say a word to him; and I don't owe him nothin'.

ing; and I don't care; and I won't be put upon; and I have my feelings the same as anyone else —
Mrs Pearce shuts the door; and Eliza's plaints are no longer audible.

* * * * *

Eliza is taken upstairs to the third floor greatly to her surprise; for she expected to be taken down to the scullery. There Mrs Pearce opens a door and takes her into a spare bedroom.

MRS PEARCE. I will have to put you here. This will be your bedroom.

LIZA. O-h, I couldn't sleep here, missus. It's too good for the likes of me. I should be afraid to touch anything. I ain't a duchess yet, you know.

MRS PEARCE. You have got to make yourself as clean as the room; then you won't be afraid of it. And you must call me Mrs Pearce, not missus. [She throws open the door of the dressing-room, now modernized as a bathroom].

LIZA. Gawd! what's this? Is this where you wash clothes? Funny sort of copper I call it.

MRS PEARCE. It is not a copper. This is where we wash ourselves, Eliza, and where I am going to wash you.

LIZA. You expect me to get into that and wet myself all over! Not me. I should catch my death. I knew a woman did it every Saturday night; and she died of it.

MRS PEARCE. Mr Higgins has the gentlemen's bathroom downstairs; and he has a bath every morning, in cold water.

LIZA. Ugh! He's made of iron, that man.

MRS PEARCE. If you are to sit with him and the Colonel and be taught you will have to do the same. They won't like the smell of you if you don't. But you can have the water as hot as you like. There are two taps: hot and cold.

LIZA [weeping] I couldn't. I durstn't. It's not natural; it would kill me. I've never had a bath in my life: not what you'd call a proper one.

PYGMALION

MRS PEARCE. Well, dont you want to be clean and sweet and decent, like a lady? You know you cant be a nice girl inside if youre a dirty slut outside.

LIZA. Boohoo!!!

MRS PEARCE. Now stop crying and go back into your room and take off all your clothes. Then wrap yourself in this [taking down a gown from its peg and handing it to her] and come back to me. I will get the bath ready.

LIZA [all tears] I cant. I wont. I'm not used to it. I've never took off all my clothes before. It's not right: it's not decent.

MRS PEARCE. Nonsense, child. Dont you take off all your clothes every night when you go to bed?

LIZA [amazed] No. Why should I? I should catch my death. Of course I take off my skirt.

MRS PEARCE. Do you mean that you sleep in the underclothes you wear in the daytime?

LIZA. What else have I to sleep in?

MRS PEARCE. You will never do that again as long as you live here. I will get you a proper nightdress.

LIZA. Do you mean change into cold things and lie awake shivering half the night? You want to kill me, you do.

MRS PEARCE. I want to change you from a frowzy slut to a clean respectable girl fit to sit with the gentlemen in the study. Are you going to trust me and do what I tell you or be thrown out and sent back to your flower basket?

LIZA. But you dont know what the cold is to me. You dont know how I dread it.

MRS PEARCE. Your bed wont be cold here: I will put a hot water bottle in it. [Pushing her into the bedroom] Off with you and undress.

LIZA. Oh, if only I'd known what a dreadful thing it is to be clean I'd never have come. I didnt know whom I was well off. I - [Mrs Pearce pushes her through the door, but leaves it partly open lest her prisoner should take to flight].

Mrs Pearce puts on a pair of white rubber sleeves, and fills the bath, mixing hot and cold, and testing the result with the bath mermeter. She perfumes it with a handful of bath salts, and adds a handful of mustard. She then takes a ~~formicid~~^{rubbing} long handled scrubbing brush and soaps it profusely with a ball of scented soap.

Eliza comes back with nothing on but the basic green handkerchief tightly round her, a pious spectre of abject terror.

MRS PEARCE. Now come along. Take that rhinoceros.

LIZA. Oh I couldnt, Mrs Pearce: I reely couldnt. I never done sucia a thing.

MRS PEARCE. Nonsense. Here: step in and tell me whether it's hot enough for you.

LIZA. Ah-oo! Ah-oo! It's too hot.

MRS PEARCE [defily matching the gown away and straining Eliza down on her back] It wont hurt you. [She sets to work with the scrubbing brush].

Eliza's screams are heartrending.

PYGMALION

Meanwhile the Colonel has been hazing it out with Higgins about Eliza. Pickering has come from the hearth to the chair and seated himself astride of it with his arms on the back to cross-examine him.

PICKERING. Excuse the straight question, Higgins. Are you a man of good character where women are concerned?

HIGGINS [modestly] Have you ever met a man of good character where women are concerned?

PICKERING. Yes; very frequently.

HIGGINS [dogmatically, lifting himself on his hands to the level of the piano, and sitting on it with a bounce!] Well, I havnt. I find that the moment I let a woman make friends with me, she becomes jealous, exacting, suspicious, and a damned nuisance. I find that the moment I let myself make friends with a woman, I become selfish and tyrannical. Women upset everything. When you let them into your life, you find that the woman is driving at one thing and youre driving at another.

PICKERING. At what, for example?

HIGGINS [coming off the piano restlessly] Oh, Lord knows! I suppose the woman wants to live her own life; and the man wants to live his; and each tries to drag the other on to the wrong track. One wants to go north and the other south; and the result is that both have to go east, though they both hate the east wind. We sit down on the bench at the corner. So here I am, a married man now, and likely to remain so.

PICKERING, leaning and standing over him earnestly Come, Higgins! You know what I mean. If I'm to be in this business against! You know what I mean. If he's in it under pressure, I shall feel responsible for that. But if he's in it under pressure, that no advantage is to be taken of either position.

HIGGINS. What! That thing! Sacred. I assure you. [Rising to explain] You see, she'll be a pupil; and teaching would be impossible unless pupils were sacred. I've taught scores of American millionaires how to speak English; the best-looking women in the world. I'm seasoned. They might as well be blocks of wood. I might as well be a block of wood. It's—

Mrs. Pearce opens the door. She has Eliza's hat in her hand.

Pickering retires to the easy-chair at the back and sits down.

HIGGINS [eagerly] Well, Mrs Pearce: is it all right?

MRS PEARCE [at the door] I just wish to trouble you with a word, if I may, Mr Higgins.

HIGGINS. Yes, certainly. Come in. [She comes forward]. Dont burn that, Mrs Pearce. I'll keep it as a curiosity.

[He takes the hat.]

MRS PEARCE. Handle it carefully, sir, please. I had to promise her not to burn it; but I had better put it in the oven for a while.

HIGGINS [putting it down hastily on the piano] Oh! thank you. Well, what have you to say to me?

PICKERING. Am I in the way?

MRS PEARCE. Not in the least, sir. Mr Higgins: will you please be very particular what you say before the girl?

HIGGINS [firmly] Of course. I'm always particular about what I say. Why do you say this to me?

MRS PEARCE [firmly] No sir: you're not at all particular when you mislead anything or when you get a little impatient. Now it doesn't matter before me: I'm used to it. But you really must not wear before the girl.

HIGGINS [indignantly] I swear! [Most emphatically] I never swear. I detest the habit. What the devil do you mean?

MRS PEARCE [stolidly] Thats what I mean, sir. You swear a great deal too much. I dont mind your damning and blustering, and what the devil and where the devil and who the devil—

HIGGINS. Mrs Pearce: this Ian and I have never been! Really!

MRS PEARCE [and to me] If you want to be a man, a son, I must ask you not to use. I've got used it for ever when she began to enjoy the bath. It begins with the same letter as bath. She knows no better: she learnt it at her mother's knee. But she must not hear it from your lips.

HIGGINS [softly] I cannot charge myself with having ever uttered it, Mr Pearce. [She looks at him steadily. He adds, Higgins is always conscious with a second air] Except perhaps in a moment of extreme and justifiable excitement.

MRS PEARCE. Only this morning, sir, you applied it to your boots, to the butter, and to the brown bread.

HIGGINS. Oh, that! Mere alliteration, Mrs Pearce, natural to a poet.

MRS PEARCE. Well, sir, whatever you choose to call it, I beg you not to let the girl hear you repeat it.

HIGGINS. Oh, very well, very well. Is that all?

MRS PEARCE. No, sir. We shall have to be very particular with this girl as to personal cleanliness.

HIGGINS. Certainly. Quite right. Most important.

MRS PEARCE. I mean not to be slovenly about her dress or untidy in leaving things about.

HIGGINS [going to her solemnly] Just so. I intended to call your attention to that. [He pauses on to Pickering, who is enjoying the conversation immensely]. It is these little things that matter, Pickering. Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves as is true of personal habits... of money. [He comes to anchor on the hearthring, with the air of a man in an unassailable position].

MRS PEARCE. Yes, sir. Then might I ask you not to come down to breakfast in your dressing-gown, or at any rate not to use it as a napkin to the extent you do, sir. And if you would be so good as not to eat everything off the same plate, and to remember not to pull the saucer apart from your hand on the clean napkin, it would be a better example to the girl. You know what happened Higgins [rouzed from the hearthring and drifting back to the piano] I may do these things sometimes in absence of mind; but surely I don't do them habitually. [Angrily] By the way: my dressing-gown smells most damnable of benzine.

MRS PEARCE. No doubt it does, Mr Higgins. But if you will wipe your fingers -

MICHAEL [yelling] Oh very well, very well: I'll wipe them in my hair in future.

MRS PEARCE. I hope you're not offended, Mr Higgins.

HIGGINS [shocked at finding himself thought capable of an unanswerable sentiment] Not at all, not at all. You're quite right, Mrs Pearce: I shall be particularly careful before the girl. Is that all?

MRS PEARCE. No, sir. Might she use some of those Japanese dresses you brought from abroad? I really can't put her back into her old things.

HIGGINS. Certainly. Anything you like. Is that all?

MRS PEARCE. Thank you, sir. That's all. [She goes out].

HIGGINS. You know, Pickering, that woman has the most extraordinary ideas about me. Here I am, a shy, diffident sort of man. I've never been able to feel really grown-up and tremendous, like other chaps. And yet she's firmly persuaded that I'm an arbitrary overbearing bossing kind of person. I can't account for it.

Mrs Pearce returns.

MRS PEARCE. If you please, sir, the trouble's beginning already. Theres a dustman downstairs, Alfred Doolittle, wants to see you. He says you have his daughter here.

PICKERING [rising] Phew! I say!

HIGGINS [promptly] Send the blackguard up.

MRS PEARCE. Oh, very well, sir. [She goes out].

PICKERING. He may not be a blackguard, Higgins.

HIGGINS. Nonsense. Of course he's a blackguard.

PICKERING. Whether he is or not, I'm afraid we shall have some trouble with him.

HIGGINS [confidently] Oh no: I think not. If theres any trouble he shall have it with me, not I with him. And we are sure to get something interesting out of him.

PICKERING. About the girl?

HIGGINS. No. I mean his dialect.

PICKERING. Oh!

MRS FLANGE [at the door] Doolittle, sir. [She admits Doolittle and raises].

Alfred Doolittle is an elderly but vigorous dustman, clad in the costume of his profession, including a hat with a back brim covering his neck and shoulders. He has well marked and rather interesting features, and seems equally free from fear and conscience. He has a remarkably expressive voice, the result of a habit of giving vent to his feelings without reserve. His present pose is that of wounded honour and stern resolution.

DOOLITTLE [at the door, uncertain which of the two gentlemen is his man] Professor Higgins?

HIGGINS. Here. Good morning. Sit down.

DOOLITTLE. Morning, Governor. [He sits down magisterially] I come about a very serious matter, Governor. HIGGINS [to Pickering] Brought up in Hounslow. Mother Welsh, I should think. [Doolittle opens his mouth, amazed. Higgins continues] What do you want, Doolittle?

DOOLITTLE [menacingly] I want my daughter: that's what I want. See?

HIGGINS. Of course you do. You're her father, aren't you? You don't suppose anyone else wants her, do you? I'm glad to see you have some spark of family feeling left. She's upstairs. Take her away at once.

DOOLITTLE [rising, fearfully taken aback] What!

HIGGINS. Take her away. Do you suppose I'm going to keep your daughter for you?

DOOLITTLE [remonstrating] Now, now, look here, Governor. Is this reasonable? Is it fair to take advantage of a man like this? The girl belongs to me. You got her. Where do I come in? [He sits down again].

HIGGINS. Your daughter had the audacity to come to my house and ask me to teach her how to speak properly so that she could get a place in a flower-shop. This gentleman and my housekeeper have been here all the time.

[Bullying him] How dare you come here and attempt to blackmail me? You sent her here on purpose.

DOOLITTLE [protesting] No, Governor.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. You must have. How else could you possibly know that she is here?

DOOLITTLE. Don't take a man up like that, Governor.

HIGGINS. The police shall take you up. This is a plant - a plot to extort money by threats. I shall telephone for the police [he goes rapidly to the telephone and opens the directory].

DOOLITTLE. Have I asked you for a brass farthing? I leave it to the gentleman here: have I said a word about money?

HIGGINS [throwing the book aside and marching down on Doolittle with a poser] What else did you come for?

DOOLITTLE [sweetly] Well, what would a man come for? Be human, Governor.

HIGGINS [disarmed] Alfred: did you put her up to it?

DOOLITTLE So help me, Governor, I never did. I take my Bible oath I ain't seen the girl these two months past.

HIGGINS. Then how did you know she was here?

DOOLITTLE ['most musical, most melancholy'] I'll tell you, Governor, if you only let me get a word in. I'm willing to tell you. I'm wanting to tell you. I'm waiting to tell you. Higgins. Pickering: this chap has a certain natural gift of rhetoric. Observe the rhythm of his native woodnotes wild. I'm willing to tell you: I'm wanting to tell you: I'm waiting to tell you. Sentimental rhetoric! that's the Welsh strain in him. It also accounts for his mendacity and dishonesty.

PICKERING. Oh, please, Higgins: I'm west country myself. [To Doolittle] How did you know the girl was here if you didn't send her?

DOOLITTLE. It was like this, Governor. The girl took a boy in the taxi to give him a jaunt. Son of her landlady, he is. He hung about on the chance of her giving him another ride home. Well, she sent him back for her luggage when she heard you was willing for her to stop here. I met the boy at the corner of Long Acre and Endell Street.

HIGGINS. Public house. Yes?

PYGMALION

DOOLITTLE. The poor man's club, Governor: why shouldn't I?

PICKERING. Do let him tell his story, Higgins.

DOOLITTLE. He told me what was up. And I ask you, what was my feelings and my duty as a father? I says to the boy, 'You bring me the luggage,' I says -

PICKERING. Why didn't you go for it yourself?

DOOLITTLE. Landlady wouldn't have trusted me with it, Governor. She's that kind of woman: you know. I had to give the boy a penny afore he trusted me with it, the little swine. I brought it to her just to oblige you like, and make myself agreeable. That's all.

HIGGINS. How much luggage?

DOOLITTLE. Musical instrument, Governor. A few pictures, a trifle of jewelry, and a bird-cage. She said she didn't want no clothes. What was I to think from that, Governor? I ask you as a parent what was I to think? Higgins. So you came to rescue her from worse than death ch?

DOOLITTLE [appreciatively: relieved at being so well understood] Just so, Governor. Thats right.

PICKERING. But why did you bring her luggage if you intended to take her away?

DOOLITTLE. Have I said a word about taking her away? Ha! I now?

HIGGINS [surprisedly] You're going to take her away, double quick. [He dashes in the hearth and rings the bell].

DOOLITTLE [rising] No, Governor. Don't say that. I'm not the man to stand in my girl's light. Here's a career opening for her as you might say; and -

Mrs Pearce opens the door and awaits orders.

HIGGINS. Mrs Pearce: this is Eliza's father. He has come to take her away. Give her to him. [He goes back to the piano, with an air of washing his hands of the whole affair].

DOOLITTLE. No. This is a misunderstanding. Listen here -

MRS PEARCE. He can't take her away, Mr Higgins: how can he? You told me to burn her clothes.

DOOLITTLE. That's right. I can't carry the girl through the streets like a blooming monkey, can I? I put it to you.

HIGGINS. You have put it to me that you want your daughter. Take your daughter. If she has no clothes go out and buy her some.

DOOLITTLE [desperately] Where's the clothes she come in? Did I burn them or did your missus here?

MRS PEARCE. I am the housekeeper, if you please. I have sent for some clothes for your girl. When they come you can take her away. You can wait in the kitchen. This way, please.

Doolittle, much troubled, accompanies her to the door; then hesitates; finally turns confidentially to Higgins.

DOOLITTLE. Listen here, Governor. You and me is men of the world, aint we?

HIGGINS. Oh! Men of the world, are we? You'd better go, Mrs Pearce.

MRS PEARCE. I think so, indeed, sir. [She goes, with dignity].

PICKERING. The floor is yours, Mr Doolittle.

DOOLITTLE [to Pickering] I thank you, Governor. [To Higgins, who takes refuge on the piano bench, a little overwhelmed by the proximity of his visitor; for Doolittle has a professional flavour of dust about him]. Well, the truth is, I've taken a sort of fancy to you, Governor; and if you want the girl, I'm not so set on having her back home again but what I might be open to an arrangement. Regarded in the light of a young woman, she's a fine handsome girl. As a daughter she's not worth her keep; and so I tell you straight. All I ask is my rights as a father; and you're the last man alive to expect me to let her go for nothing; for I can see you're one of the straight sort, Governor. Well, what's a five-pound note to you? and what's Eliza to me? [He turns to his chair and sits down judicially].

PICKERING. I think you ought to know, Doolittle, that Mr

Higgins's intentions are entirely honourable.

DOOLITTLE. Course they are, Governor. If I thought they wan't, I'd ask fifty.

HIGGINS [startled] Do you mean to say that you would sell your daughter for £50?

DOOLITTLE. Not in a general way I wouldn't; but to oblige a gentleman like you I'd do a good deal, I do assure you.

PICKERING. Have you no morals, man?

DOOLITTLE [unabashed] Can't afford them, Governor. Neither could you if you was as poor as me. Not that I mean any harm, you know. But if Liza is going to have a bit out of this, why not me too?

HIGGINS [troubled] I don't know what to do, Pickering. There can be no question that as a matter of morals it's a positive crime to give this chap a farthing. And yet I feel a sort of rough justice in his claim.

DOOLITTLE. Thats it, Governor. Thats all I say. A father's heart, as it were.

PICKERING. Well, I know the feeling; but really it seems hardly right —

DOOLITTLE. Dont say that, Governor. Dont look at it that way. What am I, Governors both? I ask you, what am I? I'm one of the undeserving poor: thars what I am. Think of what that means to a man. It means that he's up agen middle class morality all the time. If theres anything going, and i particiar a bit of it, it's always the same story: 'You're undeserving, so you can't have it.' But my needs is as great as the most deserving widow's that ever got money out of six different charities in one week for the death of the same husband. I don't need less than a deserving man: I need more. I dont eat less, neary than him; and I drink a lot more. I want a bit of amusement, cause I'm a thinking man. I want cheerfulness and a song and a band when I feel low. Well, they charge me just the same for everything as they charge the deserving. What is middle class morality?

PYGMALION

Just an excuse for never giving me anything. Therefore, I ask you, as two gentlemen, not to play that game on me. I'm playing straight with you. I ain't pretending to be deserving. I'm undeserving; and I mean to go on being undeserving. I like it; and that's the truth. Will you take advantage of a man's nature to do him out of the price of his own daughter what he's brought up and fed and clothed by the sweat of his brow until she's growed big enough to be interesting to you two gentlemen? Is five pounds unreasonable? I put it to you; and I leave it to you.

HIGGINS [rising, and going over to Pickering] Pickering: if we were to take this man in hand for three months, he could choose between a seat in the Cabinet and a popular pulpit in Wales.

PICKERING. What do you say to that, Doolittle?

DOOLITTLE. Not me, Governor, thank you kindly. I've heard all the preachers and all the prime ministers - for I'm a thinking man and game for politics or religion or social reform same as all the other amusements - and I tell you it's a dog's life any way you look at it. Undeservin'g poverty is my line. Takin' one station in society with another, it's - it's - well, it's the only one that has any ginger in it, to my taste.

PICKERING. I suppose we must give him a fiver.

PICKERING. He'll make a bad use of it, I'm afraid.

DOOLITTLE. Not me, Governor, so help me I won't. Don't you be afraid that I'll save it and spare it and live idle on it. There wont be a penny of it left by Monday: I'll have to go to work same as if I'd never had it. It wont pauperize me, you bet. Just one good spree for myself and the missus, giving pleasure to ourselves and employment to others, and satisfaction to you to think it's not been throwed away. You couldn't spend it better.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [taking out his pocket book and coming between Doolittle and the piano] This is irresistible. Lets give him ten. [He offers two notes to the duettist].

DOOLITTLE. No, Governor. She wouldn't have the heart to spend ten; and perhaps I shoudlnt neither. Ten pounds is a lot of money: it makes a man feel prudent like; and then goodbye to happiness. You give me what I ask you, Governor: not a penny more, and not a penny less.

PICKERING. Why dont you marry that missus of yours? I rather draw the line at encouraging that sort of immorality.

DOOLITTLE. Tell her so, Governor: tell her so. I'm willing. It's me that suffers by it. I've no hold on her. I got to be agreeable to her. I got to give her presents. I got to buy her clothes something sinful. I'm a slave to that woman, Governor, just because I'm not her lawful husband. And she knows it too. Catch her marrying me! Take my advice, Governor: marry Eliza while she's young and dont know no better. If you dont youll be sorry for it after. If you do, she'll be sorry for it after; but better her than you, because youre a man, and shes only a woman and dont know how to be happy anyhow.

HIGGINS. Pickering: if we listen to this man another minute, we shall have no convictions left. [To Doolittle] Five pounds I think you said.

DOOLITTLE. Thank you kindly, Governor.

HIGGINS. Youre sure you wont take ten?

DOOLITTLE. Not now. Another time, Governor.

HIGGINS [handing him a five-pound note] Here you are. DOOLITTLE. Thank you, Governor. Good morning. [He hurries to the door, anxious to get away with his booty. It then appears to be confronted with a dairily and exquisitely clean young Japanese lady in a simple blue cotton kimono printed cunningly with an all-to-white jasmine blossoms. Mrs Pearce is with her. He gets to out of her way deferentially and apologetically]. Be... pardon, miss.

THE JAPANESE LADY. Garn! Dont you know your own daughter?

DOOLITTLE (condescendingly) By no! it's Eliza!
HIGGINS (annoyed) What that? This?
PICKERING (annoyed) By Jove!

LIZA. Dont I look silly?

HIGGINS. Silly?
MRS PEARCE [at the door] Now, Mr Higgins, please dont say anything to make the girl conceited about herself.

HIGGINS [conscientiously] Oh! Quite right, Mrs Pearce. [To Eliza] Yes: damned silly.

MRS PEARCE. Please, sir.

HIGGINS [correcting himself] I mean extremely silly.

LIZA. I should look all right with my hat on. [She takes up her hat; puts it on, and walks across the room to the fireplace with a fashionable air.]

HIGGINS. A new fashion, by George! And it ought to look horrible!

DOOLITTLE [with fatherly pride] Well, I never thought she'd clean up as good looking as that, Governor. She's a credit to me, aunt she?

LIZA. I tell you, it's easy to clean up here. Hot and cold water on tap, just as much as you like, there is. Woolly towels, there is; and a towel horse so hot, it burns your fingers. Soft brushes to scrub yourself, and a wooden bowl of soap smelling like primroses. Now I know why ladies is so clean. Washing's a treat for them. Wish they could see what it is for the like of me!

HIGGINS. I'm glad the bathroom met with your approval.

LIZA. It didn't: not all of it; and I don't care who hears me say it. Mrs Pearce knows.

HIGGINS. What was wrong, Mrs Pearce?

MRS PEARCE (blanched) Oh, nothing, sir. It doesn't matter.
LIZA. I had a ~~good~~ mind to break it. I didn't know which way to look. But I hung a towel over it, I did.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. Over what?

MRS PEARCE. Over the looking-glass, sir.

HIGGINS. Doolittle: you have brought your daughter up too strictly.

DOOLITTLE. Me! I never brought her up at all, except to give her a ~~lick~~ of a strap now and again. Dont put it on me, Governor. Sinc aint accustomed to it, you see: thats

 all. But she'll soon pick up your free-and-easy ways.

LIZA. I'm a good girl, I am; and I wont pick up no free-and-easy ways.

HIGGINS. Eliza: if you say again that you're a good girl, your father shall take you home.

LIZA. Not him. You dont know my father. All he come here for was to touch you for some money to get drunk on.

DOOLITTLE. Well, what else would I want money for? To put into the plate in church, I suppose. [She puts out her tongue at him. He is so incensed by this that Pickering presently finds it necessary to step between them]. Dont you give me none of your lip; and dont let me hear you giving this gentleman any of it neither, or you'll hear from me about it. See?

HIGGINS. Have you any further advice to give her before you go, Doolittle? Your blessing, for instance.

DOOLITTLE. No, Governor: I aint such a mug as to put up my children to all I know myself. Hard enough to hold them in without that. If you want Eliza's mind improved, Governor, you do it yourself with a strap. So long, gentlemen. [He turns to go].

HIGGINS [impressively] Stop. You'll come regularly to see your daughter. It's your duty, you know. My brother is a clergyman; and he could help you in your talks with her.

DOOLITTLE [evasively] Certainly, I'll come, Governor.
 Not just this week, because I have a job at a distance.
 But later on you may depend on me. Afternoon, gentlemen. Afternoon, ma'am. [He reaches his hat to Mrs Pearce, who disdains the salutation and goes out. He walks at Higgins, thinking him probably a friend of Mrs Pearce's, though Higgins has just now seen him again.]

PYGMALION

LIZA. Don't you know the old fat Higgins in town? You used to see him again.

HIGGINS. I don't want to, Eliza. Do you?

LIZA. Not me. I don't want never to see him again, I dont. He's a disgrace to me, he is, collecting dust, instead of working at his trade.

PICKERING. What is his trade, Eliza?

LIZA. Taking money out of other people's pockets into his own. His proper trade's a navvy; and he works at sometimes too - for exercise - and earns good money at it. Ain't you going to call me Miss Doolittle any more?

PICKERING. I beg your pardon, Miss Doolittle. It was a slip of the tongue.

LIZA. Oh, I dont mind; only it sounded so genteel. I should just like to take a taxi to the corner of Tottenham Court Road and get out there and tell it to wait for me, just to put the girls in their place a bit. I woulnt speak to them, you know.

PICKERING. Better wait til we get you something really fashionable.

HIGGINS. Besides, you shoudnt cut your old friends now that you have risen in the world. Thats what we call snobbery.

LIZA. You dont call the like of them my friends now, I shoudnt hope. Theyve took it out of me often enough with their ridicule when they had the chance; and now I mean to get a bit of my own back. But if I'm to have fashionable clothes, I'll wait. I should like to have some. Mrs Pearce says you're going to give me some to wear in bed at night different to what I wear in the daytime; but it do seem a waste of money when you could get something to shew. Besides, I never could fancy changing into cold things on a winter night.

HIGGINS. [Thinking him probably a friend of Mrs Pearce's, though Higgins has just now seen him again.] Now, Eliza. There's one thing I've come for you to try on.

LIZA. Ah-ow-oo-oh! [She makes out to sneeze.]

Mrs PEACRE [following her] Oh, dont read about like that girl. [She just关 the door behind her.]

HIGGINS. Pickering: we have taken on a stiff job.

PICKERING [with conviction] Higgins: we have taken on a stiff job.

There seems to be some curiosity as to what Higgins's lessons to Eliza were like. Well, here is a sample: the first one.

Picture Eliza, in her new clothes, and feeling her inside put out of step by a lunch, dinner, and breakfast of a kind to which it is unaccustomed, seated with Higgins and the Colonel in the study, feeling like a hospital out-patient at a first encounter with the doctors.

Higgins, constitutionally unable to sit still, discomposes her still more by striding restlessly about. But for the reassuring presence and quietude of her friend the Colonel she would run for her life, even back to Drury Lane.

HIGGINS. Say your alphabet.

LIZA. I know my alphabet. Do you think I know nothing? I dont need to be taught like a child.

HIGGINS [thundering] Say your alphabet.

PICKERING. Say it, Miss Doolittle. You will understand presently. Do what he tells you; and let him teach you in his own way.

PYGMALION

LIZA. Oh wm, if you put it like that - Ahyeet, b yeet, eyee, dyee -

HIGGINS [with the nose of a wounded lion] Stop. Listen to this, PICKERING. This is what we pay for ~~as~~ elementary education. This unfortunate animal has been locked up for nine years in school at our expense to teach her to speak and read the language of Shakespeare and Milton. And the result is Ahyeet, B-yeet, C-yeet, La-yeet. [To Eliza] Say A, B, C, D.

LIZA [almost in tears] But I'm sayin' it. Ahyeet, Bayee, Ca-yeet - HIGGINS. Stop. Say a cup of tea.

LIZA. A cappa-ee.
HIGGINS. Put your tongue forward until it squeezes against the top of your lower teeth. Now say cup.

LIZA. C-c-c - I cant. C-Cup.

PICKERING. Good. Splendid, Miss Doolittle.

HIGGINS. By Jupiter, she's done it at the first shot. PICKER-ING: we shall make a duchess of her. [To Eliza] Now do you think you could possibly say tea? Not ta-yeet, mind: if you ever say ba-yeet ca-yeet da-yeet again you shall be dragged round the room three times by the hair of your head. [Fortissimo] T, T, T.

LIZA [weeping] I can't hear no difference cep that it sounds more genteel-like when you say it.

HIGGINS. Well, if you can hear that difference, what the devil are you crying for? PICKERING: give her a chocolate.
PICKERING. No, no. Never mind crying a little, Miss Doolittle: you are doing very well; and the lessons won't hurt.
I promise you I won't let him drag you round the room by your hair.

HIGGINS. Be off with you to Mrs Pearce and tell her about it. Think about it. Try to do it by yourself, and keep your tongue well forward in your mouth instead of trying to roll it up and swallow it. Another lesson at half-past four this afternoon. Away with you.

PYGMALION

Eliza, still sobbing, rushes from the room.
And that is the sort of ordeal poor Eliza has to go through for months before we meet her again on her first appearance in London society of the professional class.

PYGMALION

who did not understand, led to the other cities of popular estimation in the eighteen-seventies.

In the corner diagonally opposite the door Mrs Higgins, now over sixty and long past letting the trouble to dress out of the fashion, sits as an elegantly simple matron, with white hair and a white lace cap.

ACT III

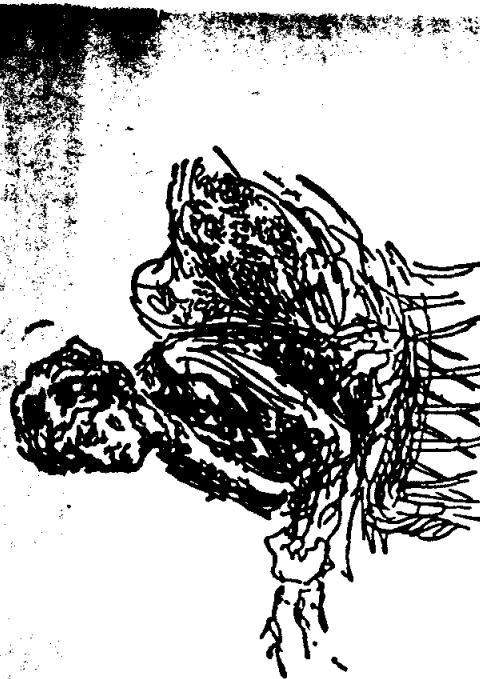

It is Mrs Higgins's at-home day. Nobody has yet arrived. Her drawing room, in a flat on Chelsea Embankment, has three windows looking on the river; and the ceiling is not so lofty as it would be in an older house of the same pretension. The windows are open, giving access to a balcony with flowers in pots. If you stand with your face to the windows, you have the fireplace on your left and the door in the right-hand wall close to the corner nearest the windows.

Mrs Higgins was brought up on Morris and Burne Jones; and her room, which is very unlike her son's room in Wimpole Street, is not crowded with furniture and little tables and nicknacks. In the middle of the room there is a big ottoman; and this, with the carpet, the Morris wallpaper, and the Morris chair, are the curtains and brocade covers of the ottoman and the chair, save only all the ornaments, and are much too handsome to be hidden by odds and ends of useless things. A few good pictures from the exhibitions in the Grosvenor Gallery, thirty years ago, (the Burne Jones, not the Whistler side of them) are on the walls. The only landscape is a Cecil Lawson on the scale of a Rubens. There is a portrait of Mrs Higgins as she was when she defied the fashion in her youth in one of the beautiful Rossetti costumes which, when caricatured by people reach of her hand. There is a Chippendale chair further back in the room between her and the window nearest her side. At the other side of the room, further forward, is an Elizabethan chair roughly carved. On the back of Brigo Jones. On the same side a piano in a whitewashed case. The corner between the fireplace and the window is occupied by a chair cushioned in Morris chintz.

It is very hot and dry in the afternoon.
The door of the front room, or Hall, is open with his hat on.

MRS HIGGINS [disarmed] Henry! [Scolding him.] What are you doing here today? It is my at-home day: you promised not to come. [As he bends to kiss her, she takes his hat off, and presents it to him.]

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. Oh bother! [He throws the hat down on the table.]
MRS HIGGINS. Go home at once.

HIGGINS [kissing her] I know, mother. I came on purpose.

MRS HIGGINS. But you mustn't. I'm serious, Henry. You offend all my friends: they stop coming whenever they meet you.

HIGGINS. Nonsense! I know I have no small talk; but people don't mind. [He sits on the sofa.]

MRS HIGGINS. Oh! don't they? Small talk indeed! What about your large talk? Really, dear, you mustn't stay.

HIGGINS. I must. I've a job for you. A phonetic job.

MRS HIGGINS. No use, dear. I'm sorry; but I can't get round your vowels; and though I like to get pretty post-cards in your patient shorthand, I always have to read the copies in ordinary writing you so thoughtfully send me.

HIGGINS. Well, this isn't a phonetic job.

MRS HIGGINS. You said it was.

HIGGINS. Not your part of it. I've picked up a girl. MRS HIGGINS. Does that mean that some girl has picked you up?

HIGGINS. Not at all. I don't mean a love affair.
MRS HIGGINS. What a pity!

MRS HIGGINS. Well, you never fall in love with anyone under forty-five. When will you discover that there are some rather nice young women about?

HIGGINS. Oh, I can't be compared with young women. My idea of a lovable woman is somebody as like you as possible. I shall never get into the way of seriously hating young women: some habits can't be changed. [Puts sharply and walking about, juggling his money and his keys in his inner jacket.] Besides, they're all alike.

MRS HIGGINS. Do you know what you would do if you really loved me, Henry?

HIGGINS. Oh brother! What? Marry, I suppose.

PYGMALION

MRS HIGGINS. No. Stop fidgeting and take your hand out of your pockets. [With a gesture of despair, he obeys and sits down again.] Thank a good boy. Now tell me about the girl.

HIGGINS. She's coming to see you.

MRS HIGGINS. I don't remember asking her.
HIGGINS. You didn't. I asked her. If you'd known her you wouldn't have asked her.

MRS HIGGINS. Indeed! Why?

HIGGINS. Well, it's like this. She's a common flower girl. I picked her off the kerbstone.
MRS HIGGINS. And invited her to my at-home!

HIGGINS [sitting and leaning to her to coax her]. Oh, that'll be all right. I'll taught her to speak properly; and she has strict orders to be a good neighbour. She's to keep to two subjects: the weather and other people's health - Fine day and How are you? - and not to let herself go on things in general. That will be safe.

MRS HIGGINS. See? To talk about our health! about our inside! — perhaps about our outsides! How could you be so silly, Henry?

HIGGINS [impatiently] Well, she must talk about something. [He covers himself and sits down again.] Oh, she'll be all right: don't you fuss. Pickering is in it with me. He's a sort of bet on that I'll pass her off as a duchess in six months. I started on her some months ago; and she's getting on like a house on fire. I shall win my bet. She has a quick ear; and she's been easier to teach than my middle-class pupils because she's had to learn a complete new language. She talks English almost as you talk French.

MRS HIGGINS. That's satisfactory, at all events.

HIGGINS. Well, it is and it isn't.

MRS HIGGINS. What does that mean?

HIGGINS. You see, I've got her pronunciation all right; but you have to consider not only how a girl pronounces, but what she pronounces; and that's where —

They are interrupted by the parlormaid, announcing guests.

THE PARLORMAID. Mrs and Miss Eynsford Hill. [She withdraws].

HIGGINS. Oh Lord! [He rises; snatches his hat from the table; and makes for the door; but before he reaches it his mother introduces him].

Mrs and Miss Eynsford Hill are the mother and daughter who sheltered from the rain in Covent Garden. The mother is well bred, quiet, and has the habitual anxiety of straitened means. The daughter has acquired a gay air of being very much at home in society; the bravado of youth, etc., etc.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. [To Mr. Higgins] How do you do? I am Mrs. Eynsford Hill.

MISS EYNSFORD HILL. [With a smile which die!] [She shakes].

MRS HIGGINS. Mrs Higgins, Mr. John Henry.

PYGMALION

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. Your celebrated son! I have so longed to meet you, Professor Higgins.

HIGGINS [Leisurely, making no movement in her direction] Dashed. [He backs against the piano and bows briskly].

MISS EYNSFORD HILL [going to him with confident familiarity]

How do you do?

HIGGINS [seating at her] I've seen you before somewhere. I havn't the ghost of a notion where; but I've heard your voice. [Drowsily] It doesn't matter. You'd better sit down. Mrs Higgins, I'm sorry to say that my celebrated son has no manners. You mustn't mind him.

MISS EYNNSFORD HILL [gaily] I don't. [She sits in the Elizabethan chair].

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL. [a little baulked] Not at all. [She sits on the ottoman between her daughter and Mrs Higgins, and has turned her chair away from the writing-table].

HIGGINS. Oh, have I been rude? I didn't mean to be.

"He goes to the central window, through which, with his back to the company, he contemplates the river and the flowers in Battersea Park on the opposite bank as if they were a frozen desert.

The parlormaid returns, ushering in Pickering.

THE PARLORMAID. Colonel Pickering. [She withdraws].

PICKERING. How do you do, Mrs Higgins?

MRS HIGGINS. So glad you've come. Do you know Mrs Eynsford Hill - Miss Eynsford Hill? [Exchange of bows. The Colonel brings the Chippendale chair a little forward between Mrs Hill and Mrs Higgins, and sits down].

PICKERING. Has Henry told you what we're come for?

HIGGINS [over his shoulder] We were interrupted; damn it!

MRS HIGGINS. Oh Henry, Henry, really!

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL [half rising] Are we in the way? MRS HIGGINS [rising and making her sit down again] No, no. You couldn't have come more fortunately: we want you to meet a friend of ours.

HIGGINS [turning hopefully] Yes, by George! We want two or three people.

You'll do as well as anybody else.

The parlormaid returns, ushering in Freddy.

THE PARLORMAID. Mr Eynsford Hill.

HIGGINS [very quickly, first entrance] Good afternoon! Another of them.

He takes hands with Mr Higgins.]

Audrey.

MRS HIGGINS. Very good evening to come.

[Introducing] Colonel Pickering.

FREDDY [bowing] Ahedo?

MRS HIGGINS. I don't think you know my son, Professor Higgins.

FREDDY [going to Higgins] Ahedo?

HIGGINS [looking at him much as if he were a pickpocket] I'll take my oath I've met you before somewhere. Where was it?

FREDDY. I don't think so.

HIGGINS [resignedly] It don't matter, anyhow. Sit down.

He shakes Freddy's hand, and almost stings him on to the ottoman with his face to the window; then comes round to the other side of it.

HIGGINS. Well, here we are, anyhow! [He sits down on the ottoman next Mrs Eynsford Hill, on her left]. And now, what the devil are we going to talk about until Eliza comes? MRS HIGGINS. Henry: you are the life and soul of the Royal Society's soirees; but really you're rather trying on more commonplace occasions.

HIGGINS. Am I? Very sorry. [Becoming suddenly] I suppose I am, you know. [Upstairs] Ha, ha!

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL. [who considers Higgins quite eligible matrimonially] I sympathize. I haven't any small talk. If people would only be frank and say what they really think!

HIGGINS [relapsing into gloom] Lord forbid!

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL [taking up her daughter's cue] But why? Higgins. What they think they ought to think is bad enough, Lord knows; but what they really think would break up the whole show. Do you suppose it would be really agreeable if I were to come out now with what I really think?

MISS EYNNSFORD HILL [gaily] Is it so very cynical?

HIGGINS. Cynical! Who the dickens said it was cynical? I mean it wouldn't be decent.

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL [seriously] Oh! I'm sure you don't mean that, Mr Higgins.

HIGGINS. You see, we're all savages, more or less. We're supposed to be civilized and cultured - to know all about

Mrs Hill. What do you know of science? [Indicating Freddy] What does he know of art or science or anything else? What the devil do you imagine I know of philosophy?

MRS HIGGINS [warningly] Or of manners, Henry?

THE PARLORMAID [opening the door] Miss Doolittle. [She withdraws.]

HIGGINS [rising hastily and running to Mrs Higgins] Here she is, mother. [He stands on tiptoe and makes signs over his mother's head to Eliza to indicate to her which lady is her hostess]. Eliza, who is exquisitely dressed, produces an impression of such remarkable distinction and beauty as she enters that they all rise, quite faltered. Guided by Higgins's signals, she comes to Mrs Higgins with studied grace.

LIZA [speaking with pedantic correctness of pronunciation and great beauty of tone] How do you do, Mrs Higgins? [She gasps slightly in making sors of the H in Higgins, but is quite successful]. Mr Higgins told me I might come.

MRS HIGGINS [cordially] Quite right. I'm very glad indeed to see you.

PICKERING. How do you do, Miss Doolittle?

LIZA [shaking hands with him] Colonel Pickering, is it not?

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL. I feel sure we have met before, Miss Doolittle. I remember your eyes.

LIZA. How do you do? [She sits down on the ottoman gracefully in the place just left by Higgins].

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL [turning back to Liza] Miss Doolittle, I beg to introduce Clara.

LIZA. How do you do?

CLARA [impudently] How do you do? [She sits down on the ottoman beside Eliza, avoiding no trifling礼节].

FREDDY [returning to their side of the room] I'm awfully glad the pleasure.

MRS EYNNSFORD HILL [introducing] My son Freddy.

LIZA. How do you do?

Freddy bows and sits down in the Elizabethan chair, infatuated.

poetry and philosophy and art and science, and so on; but how many of us know even the meanings of these names? [To Miss Hill] What do you know of poetry? [To

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [sudden] By George, yes: it all comes back to me! [They stare at him]. Covent Garden! [Lamentably] What a damned thing!

MRS HIGGINS. Henry, please! [He is about to sit on the edge of the table] Don't sit on my writing-table: you'll break it.

LIZA [sullenly] Sorry.

He goes to the divan, stumbling into the fender and over the fire-irons on his way; extricating himself with muttered imprecations; and finishing his disastrous journey by throwing himself so impatiently on the divan that he almost breaks it. Mrs Higgins looks at him, but controls herself and says nothing.

A long and painful pause ensues.

MRS HIGGINS [at last, conversationally] Will it rain, do you think?

LIZA. The shallow depression in the west of these islands is likely to move slowly in an easterly direction. There are no indications of any great change in the barometrical situation.

FREDDY. Ha! ha! how awfully funny!

LIZA. What is wrong with that, young man? I bet I got it right.

FREDDY. Killing!

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. I'm sure I hope it won't turn cold. There's so much influenza about. It runs right through our whole family regularly every spring.

LIZA [dankly] My aunt died of influenza: so they said.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL [licks her tongue sympathetically] ...

LIZA [in the same tragic tone] But it's my belief they done the old woman in.

MRS HIGGINS [puzzled] Done her in?

PYGMALION

LIZA. Y-e-e-e-es, Lord love you! Why should she die of influenza? She come through diphtheria right enough the year before. I saw her with my own eyes. Fairly blue with it, she was. They all thought she was dead; but my father he kept ladling gin down her throat till she came to so sudden that she hit the bowl off the spoon.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. [startled] Dear me!

LIZA [piling up the indictment] What call would a woman with that strength in her have to die of influenza? What become of her new straw hat that should have come to me? Somebody pinched it; and what I say is, them as pinched it done her in.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. What does doing her in mean?

BIGGINS [hastily] Oh, that's the new small talk. To do a person in means to kill them.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL [to Eliza, horrified] You surely don't believe that your aunt was killed?

LIZA. Do I not? Them she lived with would have killed her for a hat-pin, let alone a hat.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. But it can't have been right for your father to pour spirits down her throat like that. It might have killed her.

LIZA. Not her. Gin was mother's milk to her. Besides, he never poured so much down his own throat that I know of the grand of it.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. Do you mean that he drank?

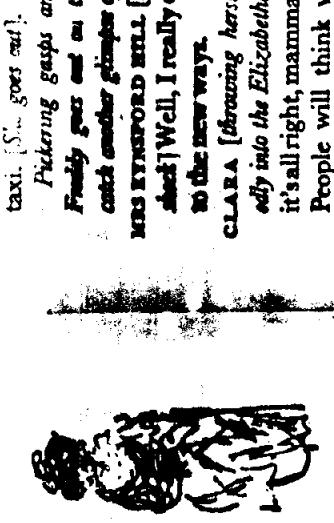

LIZA. Drank! My word! Something chronic.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. How dreadful for you!

LIZA. Not a bit. It never did him no harm

PYGMALION

what I could see. But then he did not keep it up regular. [Cheerfully] On the burst, as you might say, from time to time. And always more agreeable, when he had a drop in. When he was out of work, my mother used to give him five pence and tell him to go out and not come back until he'd drunk himself cheerful and loving-like. There's lots of women has to make their husbands drunk to make them fit to live in. [Now quickly, here's]

PYGMALION

Yousee, it's like this. If a man has a bit of a conscience, it always takes him when he's sober; and then it makes him low-spirited. A drop of booze just takes that off and makes him happy. [To Freddy, who is in convulsions of suppressed laughter] Here! what are you sniggering at?

FREDDY. The new small talk. You do it so awfully well.

LIZA. If I was doing it proper, what was you laughing at? [To Higgins] Have I said anything I oughtn't?

MRS HIGGINS [interrupting]. Not at all, Miss Doolittle.

LIZA. Well, that's a mercy, anyhow. [Exasperatedly] What I always say is -

HIGGINS [rising and looking at his watch] Ahem!

LIZA [Looking round at him; taking the hint; and rising] Well, I must go. [They all rise. Freddy goes to the door.] So pleased to have met you, Goodbye. [She turns and walks towards Higgins].

MRS HIGGINS. Goodbye.

LIZA. Goodbye, Colonel Pickering. [They shake hands].

PICKERING. Goodbye, Miss Doolittle. [Perfectly elegant diction] Goodbye, all.

LIZA [nodding to the others] Goodbye, all. FREDDY [opening the door for her]. Are you walking across the Park, Miss Doolittle? If so -

LIZA [perfectly elegant diction] Walk! Not bloody likely. [Sensational] I am going in a taxis. [She goes out].

PICKERING gasps and sits down. Family goes and on the balcony to catch another glimpse of Eliza.

MRS EYNFSORD HILL. [suffocating from shock] Well, I really can't get used to the new ways.

CLARA [drawing herself discontentedly into the Elizabethan chair] Oh, it's all right, mamma, quite right.

People will think we never go anywhere or see anybody if you are so old-fashioned.

MRS EYNFSORD HILL. I daresay I am very old-fashioned; but I do hope you won't begin using that expression, Clara. I have got accustomed to hear you talking about men as rotters, and calling everything filthy and beastly; though I do think it horrible and unladylike. But this last is really too much. Don't you think so, Colonel Pickering?

PICKERING. Don't ask me. I've been away in India for several years; and manners have changed so much that I sometimes don't know whether I'm at a respectable dinner-table or in a ship's forecastle.

CLARA. It's all a matter of habit. Theres no right or wrong in it. Nobody means anything by it. And it's so quaint, and gives such a smart emphasis to things that are not in themselves very witty. I find the new small talk... [she sighs]... and quite innocent.

MRS EYNFSORD HILL. [rising] Well, after that, I think it's time for us to go.

PICKERING. [Coming and Hugging her, briefly]

CLARA. [rising] Oh yes; we have three at-home to give. [She turns and walks towards Higgins. Goodbye, Colonel Pickering. Goodbye, Professor Higgins.]

HIGGINS. [running after her, to Higgins, briefly]

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

accompanying her to the door] Goodbye. Be sure you try on that small talk at the three at-bones. Dont be nervous about it. Pitch it in strong.

CLARA [self smiles] I ...ll. Goodbye. Such nonsense, all this early Victorian prudery! Higgins [kissing her] Such damned nonsense!

CLARA. Such bloody nonsense!

MRS EYNSFORD HILL [complaisantly] Clara! CLARA. Ha! ha! [She goes out radiant, so nscious of being thoroughly up to date, and is heard descending the stairs in a stream of silvery laughter].

FREDDY [to the heavens at large] Well, I ask you - [He gives it up, and comes to Mrs Higgins]. Goodbye.

MRS HIGGINS [shaking hands] Goodbye. Would you like to meet Miss Doolittle again?

FREDDY [eagerly] Yes, I should, most awfully.

MRS HIGGINS. Well, you know my days.

FREDDY. Yes. Thanks awfully. Goodbye. [He goes out.]

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. Goodbye, Mr Higgins.

HIGGINS. Goodbye. Goodbye.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL [to Pickering] It's no use. I shall never be able to bring myself to use that word.

PICKERING. Dont. It's not compulsory, you know. You'll get on quite well without it.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. Only, Clara is so down on me if I am not positivelyrecking with the latest slang. Goodbye.

PICKERING. Goodbye. [They shake hands.]

MRS EYNSFORD HILL [to Mrs Higgins] You must mind Clara. Pickering, catching from her lowered tone that this is not very good form, Higgins at the window. We're so poor; and she gets so few parties, poor child!

She doesn't quite know, [Mr Higgins, seeing that her eyes are very pale, and she has a slightly strained look, and goes to her to the door]. But the boy is nice. Dont you think so?

MRS HIGGINS. Oh, quite nice. I shall always be delighted to see him.

MRS EYNSFORD HILL. Thank you, dear. Godbye. [She goes out.]

HIGGINS [eagerly] Well? Is Eliza presentable? [He looks at his mother and drags her to the ottoman, where she sits down in Eliza's place with her son on her left.]

PICKERING returns to his chair on her right.

MRS HIGGINS. You silly boy, of course she's not presentable. She's a triumph of your art and of her dressmaker's; but if you suppose for a moment that she doesn't give herself away in every sentence she utters, you must be perfectly cracked about her.

PICKERING. But dont you think something might be done? I mean something to eliminate the sanguinary element from her conversation.

MRS HIGGINS. Not as long as she is in Henry's hands.

HIGGINS [aggrieved] Do you mean that my language is improper?

MRS HIGGINS. No, dearest: it would be quite proper - say on a canal barge; but it would not be proper for her at a garden party.

HIGGINS [deeply injured] Well I must say - PICKERING [interrupting him] Come, Higgins: you must learn to know yourself. I havnt heard such language as yours since we used to review the volunteers in Hyde Park twenty years ago.

HIGGINS [sulkily] Oh, well, if you say so, I suppose I dont always talk like a bishop.

MRS HIGGINS [greeting Henry with a touch] Colonel Pickering: will you tell me what is the exact state of things in Wimpole Street?

PICKERING [cheerfully: as if this completely changed the subject] Well, I have come to live there with Henry. We work together at my Indian Dialect; and we think it more convenient -

PYGMALION

MRS HIGGINS. Quite so. I know all about that: it's an excellent arrangement. But where does this girl live?

HIGGINS. With us, of course. Where should she live? MRS HIGGINS. But on what terms? Is she a servant? If not, what is she?

PICKERING [musing] I think I know what you mean, Mrs Higgins.

HIGGINS. Well, dash me if I do! I've had to work at the girl every day for months to get her to her present pitch. Besides, she's useful. She knows where my things are, and remembers my appointments and so forth.

MRS HIGGINS. How does your housekeeper get on with her? HIGGINS. Mrs Pearce? Oh, she's jolly glad to get so much taken off her hands; for before Eliza came, she used to have to find things and remind me of my appointments. But she's got some silly bee in her bonnet about Eliza. She keeps saying 'You don't think, sir': doesn't she, Pick?

PICKERING. Yes: that's the formula. 'You don't think, sir.' Thats the end of every conversation about Eliza. HIGGINS. As if I ever stop thinking about the girl and her confounded vowels and consonants. I'm worn out, thinking about her, and watching her lips and her teeth and her tongue, not to mention her soul, which is the quaintest of the lot.

MRS HIGGINS. You certainly are a pretty pair of babies, playing with your live doll. HIGGINS. Playing! The hardest job I ever tackled: make no mistake about that, mother. But you have no idea how frightfully interesting it is to take a human being and change her into a quite different human being by creating a new speech for her. It's filling up the deepest gulf that separates class from class and soul from soul.

PYGMALION

PICKERING [drawing his chair closer to Mrs Higgins and bending over to her eagerly] Yes: it's enormously interesting. I assure you, Mrs Higgins, we take Eliza very seriously. Every week - every day almost - there is some new change.

[Clear again] We keep records of every stage - diaries of gramophone disks and photographs -

HIGGINS [caressing her at the other ear] Yes, by George - it's the most absorbing experiment I ever tackled. She regularly fills our lives up: doesn't she, Pick?

PICKERING. We're always talking Eliza.

HIGGINS. Teaching Eliza.

PICKERING. Dressing Eliza.

MRS HIGGINS. What!

HIGGINS. Inventing new Elizas.

HIGGINS. { You know, she has the most extraordinary quickness of ear: speaking together } I assure you, my dear Mrs Higgins, that girl { just like a parrot. I've tried her with every } is a genius. She can play the piano quite beautifully.

HIGGINS. { possible sort of sound that a human being can make - } We have taken her to classical concerts and to music

{ Continental dialects, African dialects, Hottentot hallis; and it's all the same to her: she plays everything }

{ clicks, things it took me years to get hold of; and she hears right off when she comes home, whether it's

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

PICKERING. Oh I see. The problem of how to pass her off as a lady.

HIGGINS. I'll solve that problem. I've half solved it already. MRS HIGGINS. No, you two infinitely stupid and creaturely. The problem of what is to be done with her afterwards, Higgins. I don't see anything in that. She can do her own way, with all the advantages I have given her.

MRS HIGGINS. The advantages of that poor woman who was here just now! The manners and habits that disqualify a fine lady from earning her own living without giving her a fine lady's income! Is that what you mean?

PICKERING [indignantly, being rather bold] Oh, that will be all right, Mrs Higgins. [He tries to go].

HIGGINS [rising also] We'll find her some light employment. PICKERING. She's happy enough. Don't you worry about her. Goodbye. [He shakes hands as if he were consoling a frightened child, and makes for the door].

HIGGINS. Anyhow, there's no good bothering now. The thing's done. Goodbye, mother. [He kisses her, and follows Pickering].

PICKERING [turning for a final consolation] There are plenty of openings. We'll do what's right. Goodbye.

HIGGINS [to Pickering as they go out together] Let's take her to the Shakespeare exhibition at Earls Court.

PICKERING. Yes, let's. Her remarks will be delicious. MRS HIGGINS. She'll mimic all the people for us when we get home.

PICKERING. Ripping. [Both are heard laughing as they go down stairs].

MRS HIGGINS comes back in impatiently, and returns to her work at the desk again. She sweeps a litter of disarranged papers out of the room, gathers a sheet of paper from her stationary case, and tries resolutely to write. At the third time she gives it up, flings down her pen; grasps the table angrily, and exclaims] Oh, men, men!

HIGGINS. {she picks them up like a shot, right away, as if she had together} Beethoven and Brahms or Lehar and Lionel Monckton; been at it all her life.

PICKERING. {though six months ago, she'd never as much as touched a piano - shouting one another down with an intolerable noise} Sh-sh-sh-sh!

[They stop].

PICKERING. I beg your pardon. [He draws his chair back apologetically].

HIGGINS. Sorry. When Pickering starts shouting nobody can get a word in edgeways.

MRS HIGGINS. Be quiet. Henry. Colonel Pickering: don't you realize that when Eliza walked into Wimpole Street, something walked in with her?

PICKERING. Her father did. But Henry soon got rid of him.

MRS HIGGINS. It would have been more to the point if her mother had. But as her mother didn't something else did.

PICKERING. But what?

MRS HIGGINS [unconsciously darning herself by the word] A problem.

PYGMALION

Clearly Eliza will not pass as a duchess yet; and Higgins's bet remains unwon. But the six months are not yet exhausted; and just in time Eliza does actually pass as a princess. For a glimpse of how she did it imagine an Embassy in London one summer evening after dark. The hall door has an awning and a carpet across the sidewalk to the kerb, because a grand reception is in progress. A small crowd is lined up to see the guests arrive.

A Rolls-Royce car drives up. Pickering in evening dress, with medals and orders, alights, and hands out Eliza, in opera cloak, evening dress, diamonds, fan, flowers and all accessories. Higgins follows. The car drives off, and the three go up the steps and into the house, the door opening for them as they approach.

Inside the house they find themselves in a spacious hall from which the grand staircase rises. On the left are the arrangements for the gentlemen's cloaks. The male guests are depositing their hats and wraps there.

On the right is a door leading to the ladies' cloakroom. Ladies are going in cloaked and coming out in splendor. Pickering whispers to Eliza and points out the ladies' room. She goes into it. Higgins and Pickering take off their overcoats and take tickets for them from the attendant.

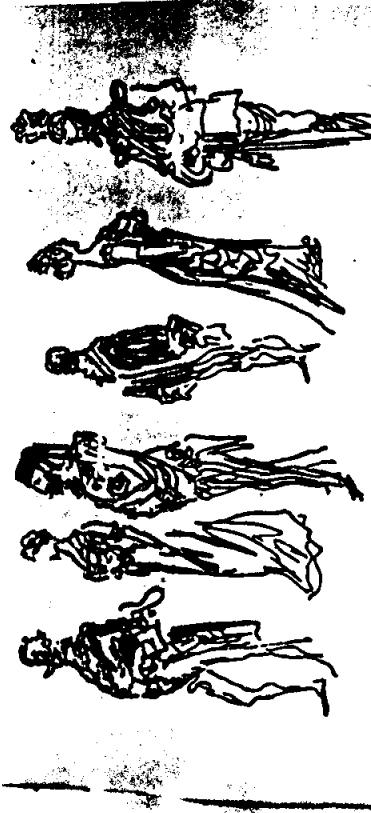

One of the guests, occupied in the same way, has his back turned. Having taken his ticket, he turns round and reveals himself as an important-looking young man with an astonishingly hairy face. He has an enormous moustache flowing out into a beard whiskers. When off his whisker on his brow. His hair is cropped closely at the back, and glows with oil. Otherwise he is very smart. He wears several worthless orders. He is evidently a foreigner, guessable as a whiskered Pandour from Hungary; but in spite of the frocity of his moustache he is amiable and genially vulnerable.

Recognizing Higgins, he flings his arms wide apart and approaches him enthusiastically.

WHISKERS. Maestro [he embraces Higgins and kisses him on both cheeks]. You remember me?

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

I am famous: they call me Hairy Faced Dick.
HIGGINS. And what are you doing here among all these swells?

NEPOMMUCK. I am interpreter. I speak thirty-two languages. I am indispensable at these international parties. You are great cockney specialist: you place a man anywhere in London the moment he open his mouth. I place any man in Europe.

A footman hurries down the grand staircase and comes to Nepommuck.

FOOTMAN. You are wanted upstairs. Her Excellency cannot understand the Greek gentleman.

HIGGINS. No I dont. Who the devil are you?

WHISKERS. I am your pupil: your first pupil, your best and greatest pupil. I am little Nepommuck, the marvellous boy. I have made your name famous throughout Europe. You teach me phonetic. You cannot forget ME.

HIGGINS. Why dont you shave?

NEPOMMUCK. I have not your imposing appearance, your chin, your brow. Nobody notice me when I shave. Now

NEPOMMUCK. Thank you, yes, immediately.

The footman goes and is lost in the crowd.

NEPOMMUCK [To Higgins] This Greek diplomatist pretends he cannot speak nor understand English. He cannot deceive me. He is the son of a Clerkenwell watchmaker. He speaks English so villainously that he dare not utter a word of it without betraying his origin. I help him to pretend; but I make him pay through the nose. I make them all pay. Ha ha! [He hurries upstairs].

PYGMALION

PICKERING. Is this fellow really an expert? Can he find out Eliza and blackmail her?

HIGGINS. We shall see. If he finds her out I lose my bet.
Eliza comes from the cloakroom and joins them.

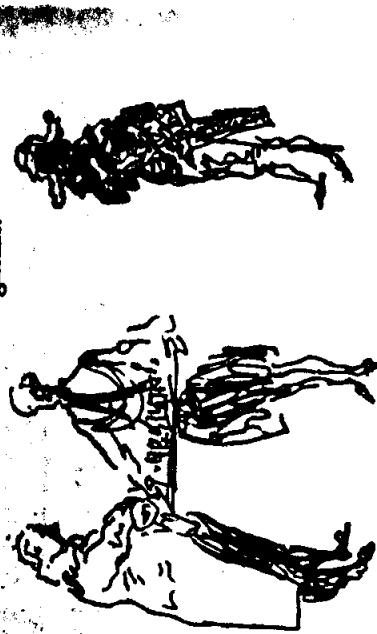

PYGMALION

PICKERING. Well, Eliza, now for it. Are you ready?

LIZA. Are you nervous, Colonel?

PICKERING. Frightfully. I feel exactly as I felt before my first battle. It's the first time that fighters.

LIZA. It is not the first time for me, Colonel. I have done this fifty times - hundreds of times - in my little piggery in Angel Court in my day-dreams. I am in a dream now.
Promise me not to let Professor Higgins wake me, for if he does I shall forget everything and talk as I used to in Drury Lane.

PICKERING. Not a word, Higgins. [To Eliza] Now ready?
LIZA. Ready.

PICKERING. Go.

*They mount the stairs. Higgins last.
Pickering whispers to the footman on the first landing.*

FIRST LANDING FOOTMAN. Miss Doolittle, Colonel Pickering, Professor Higgins.

SECOND LANDING FOOTMAN. Miss
Doolittle, Colonel Pickering, Professor
Higgins.

At the top of the staircase the Ambassador and his wife, with Nepomuck at her elbow, are receiving.

HOSTESS [taking Eliza's hand] How d'ye do?

HOST [same play] How d'ye do? How d'ye do, Pickering?

ELIZA [with a beautiful gravity that saves her tautness] How d'ye do? [She passes out to the drawing room]

HOSTESS. Is that your adopted daughter, Colonel Pickering? She will make a sensation. PICKERING. Most kind of you to invite her for me. [He passes on].

HOSTESS [to Nepomuck] Find out all about her.

NEPOMUCK [bowing] Excellency - [He goes into the crowd]

HOST. How d'ye do, Higgins? You have a rival here tonight.

He introduced himself as your pupil! Is he any good?

HIGGINS. He can learn a language in a fortnight - knows dozens of them. A sure mark of a fool.

As a phonetician, no good whatever.

HOSTESS. How d'ye do, Professor?

HIGGINS. How do you do? Fearful bore for you this sort of thing. Forgive my part in it. [He passes on].

In the drawing room and its suite of saloons the reception is in full swing. Eliza passes through. She is so intent on her ordeal that she walks like a somnambulist in a desert instead of a debonair dame in a fashionable crowd. They stop talking to look at her, examining her dress, her jewels, and strangely attractive self. Some of the younger ones at the back stand on their chairs to see.

PYGMALION

The Host and Hostess come in from the staircase and mingle with their guests. Higgins, gloomy and contemptuous of the whole business, comes into the group where they are chatting.

HOSTESS. Ah, here is Professor Higgins; he will tell us. Tell us all about the wonderful young lady, Professor.

HIGGINS [shamed speech] What wonderful young lady?

HOSTESS. You know very well. They tell me there has been nothing like her in London since people stood on their chairs to look at Mrs Langtry.

Nepomuck joins the group, full of news.

HOSTESS. Ah, here you are at last, Nepomuck. Have you found out all about the Doolittle lady?

NEPOMUCK. I have found out all about her. She is a fraud.

HOSTESS. A fraud! Oh no.

NEPOMUCK. YES, yes. She cannot deceive me. Her name cannot be Doolittle.

HIGGINS. Why?

NEPOMUCK. Because Doolittle is an English name. And she is not English.

HOSTESS. Oh, nonsense! She speaks English perfectly.

NEPOMUCK. Too perfectly. Can you shew me any English woman who speaks English as it should be spoken? Only foreigners who have been taught to speak it speak it well.

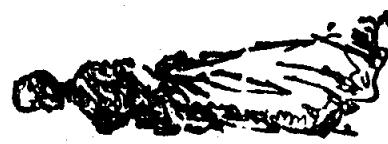

HOSTESS. Certainly she terrified me to the way she said How d'ye do. I had a schoolmistress who talked like that, and I was mortally afraid of her. But if she is not English that is all.

NEPOMUCK. Hungarian.

ALL THE GIRLS. Hungarian!

NEPOMUCK. Hungarian. And of royal blood. I am Hungarian. My blood is royal.

HIGGINS. Now, what's her name?

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

NEPOMMUCK. I did. She was very clever. She said 'Please speak to me in English; I do not understand French.' French! She pretend not to know the difference between Hungarian and French. Impossible she knows both.

HIGGINS. And the blood royal? How did you find that out?

NEPOMMUCK. Instinct, maestro, instinct. Only the Magyar races can produce that air of the divine right, those resolute eyes. She is a princess.

HOST. What do you say, Professor?

HIGGINS. I say an ordinary London girl out of the gutter and taught to speak by an expert. I place her in Drury Lane.

NEPOMMUCK. Ha ha ha! Oh, maestro, maestro, you are mad on the subject of cockney dialects. The London gutter is the whole world for you.

HIGGINS [to the Hostess] What does your Excellency say?

HOSTESS. Oh, of course I agree with Nepomuck. She must be a princess at least.

HOST. Not necessarily legitimate, of course. Morganatic perhaps. But that is undoubtedly her class.

HIGGINS. I stick to my opinion.

HOSTESS. Oh, you are incorrigible.

The group breaks up, leaving Higgins isolated. Pickering goes after him.

PICKERING. Where is Eliza? We must keep an eye on her.

ELIZA. I don't think I can bear to look at her. The people all stare at me. As if I was some sort of animal that I speak exactly like Queen Victoria. I am sorry if I have lost your bet. I have done my best; but nothing can make me the same as these people.

PICKERING. You have not lost it, my dear. You have won it ten times over.

HIGGINS. Let us get out of this. I have had enough of chattering to these fools.

PICKERING. Eliza is tired; and I am hungry. Let us clear out and have supper somewhere.

PYGMALION

H. takes off the hat and overcoat; throws them carelessly on the newspaper stand; disappears of his coat in the same way; puts on the smoking jacket; and becomes faintly smoky into the easy-chair at the bottom. Pickering, similarly attired, comes in. He also takes off his hat and overcoat, and is about to throw them on Higgins's when he halts.

PICKERING. I say: Mrs Pearce will row if we leave these things lying about in the drawing room.

HIGGINS. Oh, chuck them over the bannisters into the hall. She'll find them there in the morning and put them away all right. She'll think we were drunk.

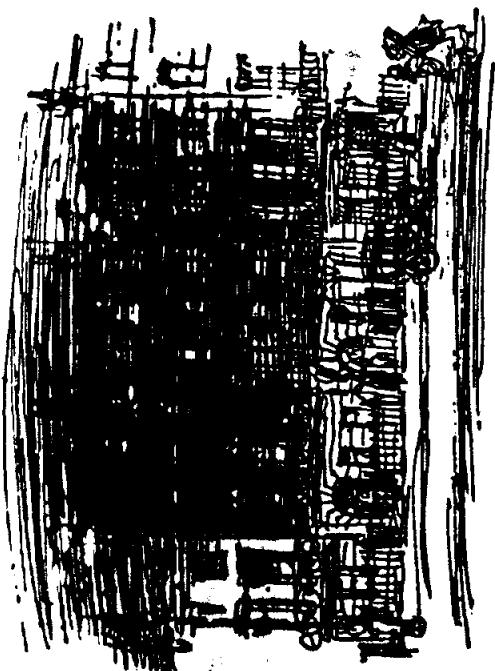

PICKERING. We are, slightly. Are there any letters? Higgins. I didn't look. [Pickering takes the overcoat and hats and goes downstairs. Higgins begins half singing half yawning an air from La Fanfulla del Golden West. Suddenly he stops and exclaims] I wonder where the devil my slippers are! Eliza looks at him darkly; then rises suddenly and leaves the room.

HIGGINS yawns again, and resumes his song. Pickering returns, with the contents of the letter-box in his hand.

PICKERING. Only circulars, and this coroneted billet-doux for you. [He throws the circulars into the fender, and posts himself on the hearth rug, with his back to the grate].

HIGGINS [glancing at the billet - doux] Money-lender. [He throws the letter after the circulars]. Eliza returns with a pair of large down-at-heel slippers. She places them on the carpet before Higgins, and sits as before without a word.

HIGGINS [yawning again] Oh Lord! What an ACT IV

The Wimpole Street laboratory. Midnight. Nobody in the room. The clock on the mantelpiece strikes twelve. The fire is not alight: it is a summer night.

Presently Higgins and Pickering are heard on the stairs.

HIGGINS [falling down, to Pickering] I say, Pick: lock up, will you? I shant be going out again.

PICKERING. Right. Can Mr. Pearce go to bed? We don't want anything more, do we?

HIGGINS. Lord, no!

Eliza opens the door and is seen on the lighted landing in all the energy in which she has just seen Higgins. She is dressed in the dark, in her night-gown, and her hair is dishevelled; her pallid countenance is set with a stern and angry expression; her eyes are fixed upon the two men; her lips are set in a hard, unyielding line; her hands are clasped behind her back; and she stands silent. Higgins, in evening dress, walks across the room, carrying a smoking cigarette holder in his hand.

PYGMALION

evening! What a crew! What a silly tomfoolery! [He raises his shoe to unlace it, and catches sight of the slippers. He stops suddenly and looks at them as if they had appeared there of their own accord.] Oh! they're there, are they? [Smiling faintly] Well, I'm a bit tired. It's been a long day. The garden party, a dinner party, and the reception! Rather too much of a good thing. But you've won your bet, Higgins. Eliza did the trick, and something to spare, eh?

HIGGINS [serenely] Thank God it's over!

Eliza flinches violently; but they take no notice of her; and she recovers herself and sits stonily as before.

PICKERING. Were you nervous at the garden party? I was.

Eliza didn't seem a bit nervous.

HIGGINS. Oh, she wasn't nervous. I knew she'd be all right. No: it's the strain of putting the job through all these months that has told on me. It was interesting enough at first, while we were at the phonetics; but after that I got deadly sick of it. If I hadn't backed myself to do it I should have chucked the whole thing up two months ago. It was we were going to win hands down, I felt like a bear in a cage, hanging about doing nothing. The dinner was worse: sitting gorging there for hours on end, nobody but a damned fool of a stationmaster worth talking to. I tell you, Pickering, never again for me. No more aristocratic duchesses. The whole thing has become antic-pungent.

PICKERING. You've never been brought in properly to this social routine. [Smiling over to the phone] I rather enjoy dipping into it occasionally myself; it makes me feel young again. Anyhow, it was a great success: an immense success. I was quite frightened once or twice because Eliza was doing it so well. You see, lots of the real people can't do it at all: they're such fools that they think style comes by nature to people in their position; and so they never learn. There's always something professional about doing a thing superlatively well.

HIGGINS. Yes: that's what drives me mad: the silly people don't know their own silly business. [Rising] However, it's over and done with; and now I can go to bed at last without dreading tomorrow.

Eliza's beauty becomes terrible.

PICKERING. I think I shall turn in too. Still, it's been a great occasion: a triumph for you. Goodnight. [He goes]. HIGGINS [following him] Goodnight. [Over his shoulder, at the door] Put out the lights, Eliza; and tell Mrs Pearce not to make coffee for me in the morning: I'll take tea. [He goes out].

Eliza tries to control herself and feel indifferent as she rises and walks across to the hearth to switch off the lights. By the time she a silly notion: the whole thing has been a bore.

PICKERING. Oh come! the garden party was frightfully exciting. My heart began beating like anything.

HIGGINS. Yes, for the first three minutes. But when I saw gets there she is on the point of screaming. She sits down in Higgins' chair and holds on hard to the arms. Finally she gives way and flings herself furiously on the floor, raging [~~screams for help and strength outside~~] What the devil have I done with my slippers! [He appears at the door].

PYGMALION

LIZA [screaming at the slippers, and impaling them on her own] There are your slippers. And the other with all her force! Those are your slippers. And there. Take your slippers, and may you never have a day's luck with them!

HIGGINS [astounded] What on earth -! [He comes to her] Whats the matter? Get up. [He pulls her up]. Anything wrong?

LIZA [breathless] Nothing wrong - with you. I've won your bet for you, havnt I? Thats enough for you. I dont matter, I suppose.

HIGGINS. You won my bet! You! Presumptuous insect! I won it. What did you throw those slippers at me for?

LIZA. Because I wanted to smash your face. I'd like to kill you, you selfish brute. Why didnt you leave me where you picked me out of - in the gutter? You thank God it's all over, and that now you can throw me back again there, do you? [She crisps her fingers frantically].

HIGGINS [looking at her in cool wonder] The creature is nervous, after all.

LIZA [gives a suffocated scream of fury, and instinctively darts her nails at his face]!!

HIGGINS [catching her wrists] Ah! would you? Claws in, you cat. How dare you shew your temper to me? Sit down and be quiet. [He throws her roughly into the easy-chair].

LIZA [crushed by superior strength and weight] Whats to become of me? Whats to become of me?

HIGGINS. How the devil do I know whats to become of you? What does it matter what becomes of you?

LIZA. You dont care. I know you dont care. You wouldn't care if I was dead. I'm nothing to you - not so much as them slippers.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [tendering] Those slippers.

LIZA [with bitter submission] Those slippers. I didn't think it made any difference.

A person, ELIZA helpless and crying, HIGGINS [little angry]

HIGGINS [his voice muffled] Why have you begun going on like this? May I ask... you complain of your treatment here?

LIZA. No.

HIGGINS. Has anybody behaved badly to you? Colonel Pickering? Mrs Pearce? Any of the servants?

LIZA. No.

HIGGINS. I presume you dont pretend that I have treated you badly?

LIZA. No.

HIGGINS. I am glad to hear it. [He moderates his tone]. Perhaps you're tired after the strain of the day. Will you have a glass of champagne? [He moves towards the door].

LIZA. No [Recollecting her manners] Thank you.

HIGGINS [good-humored again] This has been coming on you for some days. I suppose it was natural for you to be anxious about the garden party. But that's all over now. [He pats her kindly on the shoulder. She withdraws]. Theres nothing more to worry about.

LIZA. No. Nothing more for you to worry about. [She suddenly rises and gets away from him by going to the piano bench, where she sits and hides her face]. Oh God! I wish I was dead. HIGGINS [starting after her in sincere surprise] Why? In here? His name, why? [Reasonably, going to her] Liza... no me, Eliza. All this irritation... is purely subjective.

LIZA. I dont understand. I'm too ignorant.

HIGGINS. It's only imagination. Low spirits and nothing else. Nobody's hurting you. Nothing's wrong. You go to bed like a good girl and sleep it off. Have a little cry and say your prayers: that will make you comfortable.

LIZA. I heard your prayers. Thank God it's all over!

HIGGINS [impertinently] Well, don't you thank God it's all over? Now you are free and can do what you like.

[Feeling himself together in depression] What am I fit for? What have you left me fit for? Where am I to go? What am I to do? What to become of me?

HIGGINS [frightened, but not at all impressed] Oh, that's what's worrying you, is it? [He thrusts his hands into his pockets, and walks about in his usual manner, rattling the contents of his pockets, as if condescending to a trivial subject out of pure kindness.] I shouldn't bother about it if I were you. I should imagine you won't have much difficulty in settling yourself somewhere or other, though I hadn't quite realized that you were going away. [She looks quickly at him: he does not look at her, but examines the dessert stand on the piano and decides that he will eat an apple]. You might marry, you know. [He bites a large piece out of the apple and munches it noisily]. You see, Eliza, all men are not confirmed old bachelors like me and the Colonel. Most men are the marrying sort (poor devils!); and you're not bad-looking; it's quite a pleasure to look at you sometimes — not now, of course, because you're crying and looking as ugly as the very devil, but when you're all right and quite yourself, you're what I should call attractive. That is, to the people in the marrying line, you understand. You go to bed and have a good nice rest, and then get up and look at yourself in the glass; and

LIZA. [With a smile] I'm not quite fit for that, sir.

HIGGINS. [With a smile, speechless, and does not stir.]

LIZA. [With a smile] I'm not quite fit for that, sir.

PYGMALION

apple with a dreamy expression of happiness, as it is quite a good one.

HIGGINS [a general effort occurring to him] I dare say my mother could find some chap of another who would do very well.

LIZA. We were above that at the corner of Tottenham Court Road.

HIGGINS [waking up] What do you mean? LIZA. I sold flowers. I didn't sell myself. Now you've made a lady of me I'm not fit to sell anything else. I wish you'd left me where you found me.

HIGGINS [slinging the core of the apple decisively into the grate] Tosh, Eliza. Don't you insult human relations by dragging all this cant about buying and selling into it. You needn't marry the fellow if you don't like him.

LIZA. What else am I to do?

HIGGINS. Oh, lots of things. What about your old idea of a florist's shop? Pickering could set you up in one: he has lots of money. [Chuckles] He'll have to pay for all those togs you have been wearing today; and that, with the hire of the jewellery, will make a big hole in two hundred pounds. Why, six months ago you would have thought it the millennium to have a flower shop of your own. Come! you'll be all right. I must clear off to bed: I'm devilish sleepy. By the way, I came down for something: I forgot what it was.

LIZA. Your slippers.

HIGGINS. Oh yes, of course. You shied them at me. [He picks them up, and is going out when she rises and speaks to him].

LIZA. Before you go, sir —

HIGGINS [dropping the slippers in his surprise at her calling him Sir] Eh?

LIZA. Do my clothes belong to me or to Colonel Pickering?

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [coming into the room as if her question were the very climax of unreason] What the devil use would they be to Pemberley?

LIZA. He might want them for the next girl you pick up to experiment on.

HIGGINS [shocked and hurt] Is that the way you feel towards us? LIZA. I don't want to hear anything more about that. All I want to know is whether anything belongs to me. My own clothes were burnt.

HIGGINS. But what does it matter? Why need you start bothering about that in the middle of the night?

LIZA. I want to know what I may take away with me. I don't want to be accused of stealing.

HIGGINS [now deeply wounded] Stealing! You shouldn't have said that, Eliza. That shews a want of feeling. LIZA. I'm sorry. I'm only a common ignorant girl; and in my station I have to be careful. There can be any feelings between the like of you and the like of me. Please will you tell me what belongs to me and what doesn't?

HIGGINS [very sulky] You may take the whole damned houseful if you like. Except the jewels. They're hired. Will that satisfy you? [He turns on his heel and is about to go in extreme dudgeon].

LIZA [drinking in his emotion like nectar, and nagging him to provoke a further supply] Stop, please. [She takes off her jewels]. Will you take these to your room and keep them safe? I don't want to run the risk of their being missing. HIGGINS [furious] Hand them over. [She puts them into his hands]. If these belonged to me instead of to the jeweller, I'd ram them down your ungrateful throat. [He perfunctorily thrusts them into his pockets, unconsciously decorating them with the prancing ends of the chains].

LIZA [taking a ring off] This ring isn't the jeweller's; it's the one you bought me in Brighton. I don't want it now. [She goes to the fire, throws it into the fireplace, and turns on her so threateningly that she crutches over the piano with her hands over her face, and encloses] Dont you hit me.

HIGGINS. Hit you! You infamous creature! how dare you accuse me of such a thing? It is you who have hit me. You have wounded me to the heart.

LIZA [thrilling with hidden joy] I'm glad. I've got a little of my own back anyhow.

HIGGINS [with dignity, in his finest professional style] You have caused me to lose my temper: a thing that has hardly ever happened to me before. I prefer to say nothing more tonight. I am going to bed.

LIZA [perily] You'd better leave a note for Mrs Pearce about the coffee; for she won't be told by me.

HIGGINS [formally] Damn Mrs Pearce; and damn the coffee; and damn you; and [wildly] damn my own folly in having lavished my hard-earned knowledge and the treasure of my regard and intimacy on a heartless gutter-snipe. [He goes out with impulsive decorum, and spoils it by slamming the door savagely].

Eliza goes down on her knees on the hearth rug to look for the ring. When she finds it she considers for a moment what to do with it. Finally she flings it down on the dustbin stand and goes upstairs in a tearing rage.

The furniture of Eliza's room has been increased by a big wardrobe and a sumptuous dressing-table. She comes in and switches on the electric light. She goes to the wardrobe; opens it; and pulls out a walking dress, a hat, and a pair of shoes, which she throws on the bed. She takes off her evening dress and slippers; then takes a padded hanger from the wardrobe; adjusts it carefully in the evening dress and hangs it in the wardrobe, which she stands with a slam. She puts on her walking shoes, her walking dress, and hat. She takes her wrist watch from the dressing-table and fastens it on. She puts on her gloves; takes her vanity bag; and looks into it to see that her purse is there before hanging it on her wrist. She makes for the door. Every movement expresses her furious resolution.

She takes a last look at herself in the glass.

She suddenly pats out her tongue at herself; then leaves the room, switching off the electric light at the door.

Meanwhile, in the street outside, Freddy Eynsford Hill, loloform, is gazing up at the second floor, in which one of the windows is still lighted.

The light goes out.

FREDDY. Goodnight, darling, darling.

Eliza comes out, giving the door a considerable bang behind her.

LIZA. Whatever are you doing here?

FREDDY. Nothing. I spend most of my nights here. It's the only place where I'm happy. Don't laugh at me, Miss Doolittle.

LIZA. Don't you call me Miss Doolittle, do you hear? Liza's good enough for me. [She breaks down and grabs him by the shoulders] Freddy: you don't think I'm a heartless guttersnipe, do you?

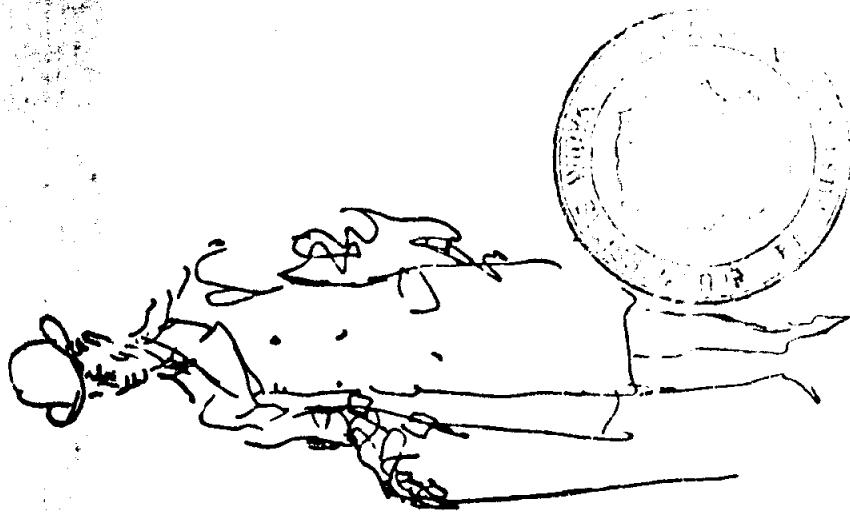

FREDDY. Oh no, no, darling: how can you imagine such a thing? You are the loveliest, dearest -

He loves all self-control and smothered her with kisses. She, hungry for comfort, responds. They stand there in one another's arms.

YGMALION

An elderly police constable arrives.

CONSTABLE. [scandalized] Now then! Now then!!

They release one another kindly.

PYGMALION

FREDDY. Sorry, constable. We've only just become engaged.

They run away.

The constable shakes his head, reflecting on his own courtship and on the vanity of human hopes. He moves off in the opposite direction with slow professional steps.

The flight of the lovers takes them to Cavendish Square. There they halt to consider their next move.

LIZA [out of breath] He didn't half give me a fright, that copper. But you answered him proper.

FREDDY. I hope I haven't taken you out of your way. Where were you going?

LIZA. To the river.

FREDDY. What for?

LIZA. To make a hole in it.

FREDDY [terrified] Eliza, darling. What do you mean? What's the matter?

LIZA. Never mind. It doesn't matter now. There's nobody in the world now but you and me, is there?

FREDDY. Not a soul.

They sit in another embrace, and are again surprised by a constable. What's this?

SECOND CONSTABLE. Very well! What's this? Where do you think you are? Move along here, double quick.

FREDDY. As you say, sir, we're double quick.

They run away again, and are in Hanover Square before they stop for another conference.

PYGMALION

LIZA. Cant we? I think it'd be lovely to wander about for ever.

FREDDY. Oh, darling.

They embrace again, oblivious of the arrival of a crawling taxi. It stops.

TAXIMAN. Can I drive you and the lady anywhere, sir?
They start auster.

LIZA. Oh, Freddy, a taxi. The very thing.

FREDDY. But, damn it, I've no money.

LIZA. I have plenty. The Colonel thinks you should never go out without ten pounds in your pocket. Listen. We'll drive about all night; and in the morning I'll call on old Mrs Higgins and ask her what I ought to do. I'll tell you all about it in the cab. And the police wont touch us there.

FREDDY. Righto! Ripping. [To the Taximan] Wimbleton Common. [They drive off.]

ACT V

Mrs Higgins's drawing room. She is at her writing-table as before. The parlormaid comes in.

THE PARLORMAID [at the door] Mr Henry, maam, is downstairs with Colonel Pickering.

MRS HIGGINS. Well, shew them up.

THE PARLORMAID. They're using the telephone, maam. Telephoning to the police, I think.

MRS HIGGINS. What!

THE PARLORMAID [coming hurriedly and bursting her voice] Mr Henry is in a state, maam. I thought I'd better tell you. MRS HIGGINS. If you had told me that Mr Henry was not in a state it would have been more surprising. Tell them to come up when they're finished with the police. I suppose he's lost something.

THE PARLORMAID. Yes, maam.

MRS HIGGINS. Go upstairs and tell Miss Doolittle that Mr Henry and the Colonel are here. Ask her not to come down till I send for her.

PYGMALION

THE PARLORMAID. Yes, maam.
Higgins bursts in. He is, as the parlormaid has said, in a state.

HIGGINS. Look here, mother: here's a confounded thing!

MRS HIGGINS. Yes, dear. Good morning.
[He checks his impatience and kisses her, whilst the parlormaid goes out.] What is it?

HIGGINS. Eliza's bolted.

MRS HIGGINS [calmly continuing her writing]
You must have frightened her.

HIGGINS. Frightened her! Nonsense! She was left last night, as usual, to turn out the lights and all that; and instead of going to bed she changed her clothes and went right off: her bed wasn't slept in.

She came in a cab for her things before seven this morning; and that fool Mrs Pearce let her have them without telling me a word about it. What am I to do?

MRS HIGGINS. Do without, I'm afraid, Henry. The girl has a perfect right to leave if she chooses.

HIGGINS [screaming across the room] But I can't find anything. I don't know what appointments I've got.
I'm - [PICKERING comes in. Mrs Higgins puts down her pen and turns away from the writing-table].

PICKERING. Morning, Mrs Higgins.
Hans Henry, right you are. [He sits down at the writing-table].

HIGGINS. What does that ass of an inspector say? Have you offered a reward?

MRS HIGGINS [sitting down again, looking at him] to say yes, I expect the police after Eliza?

HIGGINS. Of course. What are the police for? What else could we do? [He sits in the Elizabethan chair].

PICKERING. The inspector made a lot of difficulties. I really think he suspected us of some improper purpose.

PYGMALION

MRS HIGGINS. Well, of course he did. What right have you to go to the police and give the girl's name as if she were a thief, or a lost umbrella, or something? Really! [She sits down again, deeply vexed].

HIGGINS. But we want to find her.

PICKERING. We can't let her go like this, you know, Mrs
Higgins. What were we to do?

MRS HIGGINS. You have no more sense, either of you, than two children. Why -

The parlormaid comes in and breaks off the conversation.

THE PARLORMAID. Mr Henry: a gentleman wants to see you very particular. He's been sent on from Wimpole Street.

HIGGINS. Oh, bother! I can't see anyone now. Who is it?
THE PARLORMAID. A Mr Doolittle, sir.

PICKERING. Doolittle! Do you mean the dustman?

THE PARLORMAID. Dustman! Oh no, sir: a gentleman.

HIGGINS [springing up excitedly] By George, Pick, it's some relative of hers that she's gone to. Somebody we know nothing about. [To the parlormaid] Send him up, quick.

THE PARLORMAID. Yes, sir. [She goes].

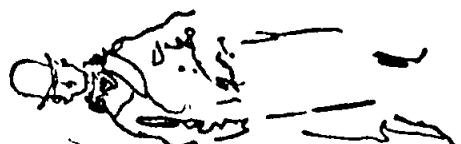

HIGGINS [tearfully, going to his mother] Gentle relatives! now we shall hear something. [He sits down in the Chippendale chair].

MRS HIGGINS. Do you know any of her people?

PICKERING. Only her father: the fellow we told you about.
THE PARLORMAID [announcing] Mr Doolittle. [She withdraws].

Doolittle enters. He is resplendently dressed as for a fashionable wedding, and sitting in fact, by the bridge-room. A flower in his button-hole, a handkerchief in his belt, and fastened to either shoe come from the Elizabethan chair. He is a tall, thin man, dressed in old-fashioned clothes. His hair is grey, and his eyes are very blue.

DOLITTLE [indicating his own person] See here! Do you see this? I am a man.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. Done what, man?
DOOLITTLE. This, I tell you. Look at it. Look at this hat.
Look at this coat.

PYGMALION

MRS HIGGINS. Good morning, Mr Doolittle. Won't you sit down?

DOOLITTLE [takes about as he becomes conscious that he has forgotten his haters] Asking your pardon, ma'am. [He opens her and shakes her preferred hand.] Thank you. [He sits down on the ottoman, on Pickering's right.] I am that full of what has happened to me that I can't think of anything else.

HIGGINS. What the dickens has happened to you?

DOOLITTLE. I shouldn't mind if it had only happened to me: anything might happen to anybody and nobody to blame but Providence, as you might say. But this is something that you done to me: yes, you, Enry Higgins.

HIGGINS. Have you found Eliza?

DOOLITTLE. Have you lost her?

HIGGINS. Yes.

DOOLITTLE. You have all the luck, you have. I aint found her; but she'll find me quick enough now after what you done to me.

MRS HIGGINS. But what has my son done to you, Mr Doolittle?

DOOLITTLE. Done to me! Ruined me! Destroyed my happiness. Tied me up and delivered me into the hands of middle class morality.

HIGGINS [ringing intolerance and standing over Doolittle] Your leaving. You're drunk. You're mad. I gave you five pounds. And sis, I had two conversations with you, at half-a-crown an hour. I've never seen you since.

DOOLITTLE. Oh! Drunk am I? Mad am I? Tell me this. Did you ever see a better animal husbander in America that was giving five millions to found Moral Reform Societies all over the world, and that wanted you to invent a universal language for him?

PICKERING. Has Eliza been buying you clothes?
DOOLITTLE. Eliza! not she. Why would she buy me clothes?

HIGGINS. What! Ezra J. Watermauler! He's dead. [He sits down again carelessly.]

Doolittle. Yes; he's dead; and I'm done for. Now did you or did you not write a letter to him to say that the most original moralist at present in England, to the best of your knowledge, was Alfred Doolittle, a common drunk-man?

Higgins. Oh, after your first visit I remember making some silly joke of the kind.

Doolittle. Ah! you may well call it a silly joke. It put the lid on me right enough. Just give him the chance he wanted to shew that Americans is not like us: that they reckonize and respect merit in every class of life, however humble. Them words is in his blooming will, in which, Henry Higgins, thanks to your silly joking, he leaves me a share in his Pre-digested Cheese Trust worth four thousand a year on condition that I lecture for his Wannafeller Moral Reform World League as often as they ask me up to six times a year.

Higgins. The devil he does! Whew! [Brightening suddenly]

What a lark!

Pickering. A safe thing for you, Doolittle. They wont ask you twice.

Doolittle. It aint the lecturing I mind. I'll lecture them blue in the face, I will, and not turn a hair. It's making a gentleman of me that I object to. Who asked him to make a gentleman of me? I was happy. I was free. I touched pretty nigh everybody for money when I wanted it, same as I touched you, Enry Higgins. Now I am worried; tied neck and heels; and everybody touches me for money. It's a fine think for you, says my solicitor. Is it? says I. You treat me a good thing for you, I says. When I was a poor man, and had a solicitor once when they found a pram in the back yard of my house, and got shut of me and got me sent off into an asylum as he could. Same with the doctors: used to shock me out of the hospital before I could hardly stand up, and then charge me to pay. Now there finds out that I'm not a healthy man and cant live unless they looks after me twice a day. In the house I'm not let do a hand's turn for myself: somebody else must do it and touch me for it. A year ago I hadnt a relative in the world except two or three that wouldnt speak to me. Now I've fifty, and not a decent week's wages among the lot of them. I have to live for others and not for myself: that's middle class morality. You talk of losing Eliza. Dont you be anxious: I bet she's on my doorstep by this: she that could support herself easy by selling flowers if I wasn't respectable. And the next one to touch me will be you, Enry Higgins. I'll have to learn to speak middle class language from you, instead of speaking proper English. Thats where you'll come in; and I daresay thats what you done it for.

Mrs Higgins. But, my dear Mr Doolittle, you need not suffer all this if you are really in earnest. Nobody can force you to accept this bequest. You can repudiate it. Isn't that so, Colonel Pickering?

Pickering. I believe so.

Doolittle [softening his manner in deference to her sex] Thats the tragedy of it, maam. It's easy to say chuck it; but I havnt the nerve. Which of us has? We're all intimidated. Intimidated, maam: thats what we are. What is there for me if I chuck it but the workhouse in my old age? I have to dye my hair already to keep my job as a dustman. If I was one of the deserving poor, and had put by a bit, I could chuck it; but then why should I, because the deserving poor might as well be millionaires for all the happiness they evcr has. They dont know what happiness is. But I, as one of the undeserving poor, have nothing between me and the pauper's uniform but this here blasted four thousand a year that shoves me into the middle class. (Excuse the expression, maam; youd use it yourself if you had my provocation.) Theyve got you every way you turn: it's a choice between the Skilly of the workhouse and the Char' Bydys of the middle class; and I havnt the nerve for the workhouse'. Intimidated: that's what I am. Broke. Bought up. Happier men than me will call for my dust, and touch me for their tip; and I'll look on helpless, and envy them. And that's what your son has brought me to. [He is overcome by emotion.]

PYGMALION

MRS HIGGINS. Well, I'm very glad you're not going to do anything foolish, Mr Doolittle. For this solves the problem of Eliza's future. You can provide for her now.

DOOGLITTLE [with melancholy resignation] Yes, maam: I'm expected to provide for everyone now, out of three thousand a year.

HIGGINS [jumping up] Nonsense! he can't provide for her. He shant provide for her. She doesn't belong to him. I paid him five pounds for her. Doolittle: either you're an honest man or a rogue.

DOOGTLITTLE [tolerantly] A little of both, Enry, like the rest of us: a little of both.

HIGGINS. Well, you took that money for the girl; and you have no right to take her as well.

MRS HIGGINS. Henry: don't be absurd. If you want to know where Eliza is, she is upstairs.

HIGGINS [amazed] Upstairs!!! Then I shall just soon fetch her downstairs. [He makes resolutely for the door.]

MRS HIGGINS [rising and following him] Be quiet, Henry. Sit down. I —

MRS HIGGINS. Sit down, dear; and listen to me.

HIGGINS. Oh, very well, very well. [He throws himself ungraciously on the sofa, so that his back is towards the audience]. But I think you might have told us this half an hour ago.

MRS HIGGINS. Eliza came to me this morning. She told me of the brutal way I've been treated her.

HIGGINS [bounding up again] What!

MRS HIGGINS. Very well, thank her, or pet her, or admire her, or whatever how splendid she'd been.

HIGGINS [impatiently] But she knew all about that. We

PYGMALION

PICKERING [rising also] My dear Mrs Higgins, she's been telling you stories. We didn't treat her brutally. We hardly said a word to her; and we parted on particularly good terms. [Turning on Higgins] Higgins: did you bully her after I went to bed?

HIGGINS. Just the other way about. She threw my slippers in my face. She behaved in the most outrageous way. I never gave her the slightest provocation. The slippers came bang into my face the moment I entered the room — before I had uttered a word. And used perfectly awful language.

PICKERING [astonished] But why? What did we do to her?

MRS HIGGINS. I think I know pretty well what you did. The girl is naturally rather affectionate, I think. Isn't she, Mr Doolittle?

DOOGTLITTLE. Very tender-hearted, maam. Takes after me.

MRS HIGGINS. Just so. She had become attached to you both. She worked very hard for you, Henry. I don't think you quite realize what anything in the nature of brain work means to a girl of her class. Well, it seems that when the great day of trial came, and she did this wonderful thing for you without making a single mistake, you two sat there and never said a word to her, but talked together of how glad you were that it was all over and how you had been bored with the whole thing. And then you were surprised because she threw your slippers at you! I should have thrown the fire-irons at you.

HIGGINS. We said nothing except that we were tired and wanted to go to bed. Did we, Pick?

PICKERING [shrugging his shoulders] That was all.

MRS HIGGINS [ironically] Quite sure?

PICKERING. Absolutely. Really, that was all.

MRS HIGGINS. You didn't thank her, or pet her, or admire her, or whatever how splendid she'd been.

HIGGINS [impatiently] But she knew all about that. We don't care what you mean...

PYGMALION

PICKERING [conscience stricken] Perhaps we were a little inconsiderate. Is she very angry?

MRS HIGGINS [returning to her place at the writing-table] Well, I'm afraid she won't go back to Wind-pole Street, especially now that Mr Doolittle is able to keep up the position you have thrust on her; but she says she is quite willing to meet you on friendly terms and to let bygones be bygones.

MRS HIGGINS. If you promise to behave yourself, Henry, I'll ask her to come down. If not, go home; for you have taken up quite enough of my time.

HIGGINS. Oh, all right. Very well. Pick: you behave yourself. Let us put on our best Sunday manners for this creature that we picked out of the mud. [He flings himself sulkily into the Elizabethan chair].

DOOLITTLE [remonstrating] Now, now, Enry Iggin's! Have some consideration for my feelings as a middle class man. MRS HIGGINS. Remember your promise, Henry. [She presses the bell-button on the writing-table]. Mr Doolittle: will you be so good as to step out on the balcony for a moment. I don't want Eliza to have the shock of your news until she has made it up with these two gentlemen. Would you mind?

DOOLITTLE. As you wish, Enry. Anything to help Henry to keep her off my hands. [He disappears through the window].

The parlourmaid answers the bell. Pickering sits down at Mrs Higgins' feet.

MRS HIGGINS. Ask Miss Doolittle to come down, please.

THE PARLORMAID. Yes, ma'am. [She goes out].

MRS HIGGINS. Now, Henry: be good.

HIGGINS. I am behaving myself perfectly.

PICKERING. He is doing his best, Mrs Higgins.

PYGMALION

A noise. Higgins throws back his head; stretches out his legs; and begins to whistle.

MRS HIGGINS. Henry, dearest, you don't look at all nice in that attitude.

HIGGINS [pulling himself together] I was not trying to look nice, mother.

MRS HIGGINS. It doesn't matter, dear. I only wanted to make you speak.

HIGGINS. Why?

MRS HIGGINS. Because you can't speak and whistle at the same time.

HIGGINS groans. Another very trying pause.

HIGGINS [springing up, out of patience] Where the devil is that girl? Are we to wait here all day?

Eliza enters, sunny, self-possessed, and giving a staggeringly convincing exhibition of ease of manner. She carries a little work-basket, and is very much at home. Pickering is too much taken aback to rise.

LIZA. How do you do, Professor Higgins? Are you quite well?

HIGGINS [choking] Am I - [He can say no more].

LIZA. But of course you are: you are never ill. So glad to see you again, Colonel Pickering. [He rises hastily; and then takes her hand]. Quite chilly this morning, isn't it? [She sits down on his left. He sits beside her].

HIGGINS. Don't you dare try this game on me. I taught it to you, and it doesn't take me in. Get up and come home; and I'll have tea at five.

Eliza takes a face of red beetroot from her basket, and begins to stir it in a small basin. She is very busy.

MRS HIGGINS. Very nice, that beetroot, Henry. No woman could resist such an invitation.

HIGGINS. You let her alone, Eliza. I'm not going to be herself! You will jolly soon see whether she has an idea that I havnt put into her head or a word that I havnt put into her mouth. I tell you I have created this thing out of the squashed cabbage leaves of Covent Garden; and now she pretends to play the fine lady with me.

MRS HIGGINS [placidly] Yes, dear; but youll sit down, wont you?

Mrs Higgins sits down again, savage.

LIZA [to Pickering, taking no apparent notice of Higgins, and working away deftly] Will you drop me altogether now that the experiment is over, Colonel Pickering?

PICKERING. Oh dont. You mustnt think of it as an experiment. It shocks me, somehow.

LIZA. Oh, I'm only a squashed cabbage leaf -

PICKERING [impulsively] No.

LIZA [continuing quietly] - but I owe so much to you that I should be very unhappy if you forgot me.

PICKERING. Its very kind of you to say so, Miss Doolittle.

LIZA. Its not because you paid for my dresses. I know you are generous to everybody with money. But it was from you that I learnt really nice manners, and that is what makes one a lady, isnt it? You see it was so very difficult for me with the example of Professor Higgins always before me. I was brought up to be just like him, unable to control myself, and using bad language on the slightest provocation. And I should never have known that ladies and gentlemen didnt behave like that if you hadnt been there.

HIGGINS. Well!!

PICKERING. Oh, thats only his way, you know. He doesnt mean it.

LIZA. Oh, I didnt mean it either, when I was a flower girl. It was only my way. But you see I did it; and thats what makes the difference after all.

PICKERING. No doubt. Still, he taught you to speak; and I couldnt have done that, you know.

PYGMALION

LIZA [initially] Of course: that is his profession.
HIGGINS. Damnation!

LIZA [swimming] It was just like learning to dance in the fashionable way: there was nothing more than that in it. But do you know what began my real education?

PICKERING. What?

LIZA [stopping her work for a moment] Your calling use Miss Doolittle that day when I first came to Wimpole Street. That was the beginning of self-respect for me. [She resumes her stitching]. And there were a hundred little things you never noticed, because they came naturally to you. Things about standing up and taking off your hat and opening doors -

PICKERING. Oh, that was nothing.

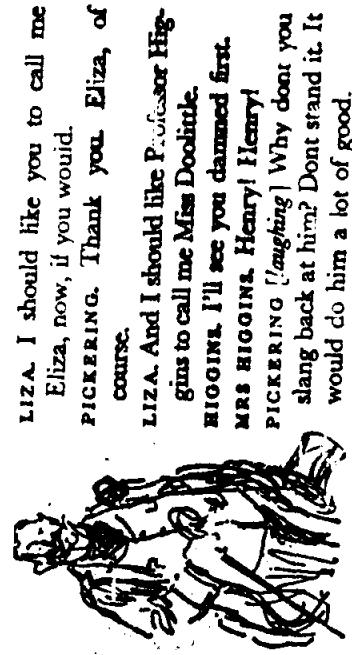

LIZA. Yes: things that shewed you thought and felt about me as if I were something better than a scullery-maid; though of course I know you would have been just the same to a scullery-maid if she had been let into the drawing room. You never took off your boots in the dining room when I was there.

PICKERING. You mustnt mind that. Higgins takes off his boots all over the place.

LIZA. I know. I am not blaming him. It is his way, isn't it? But it made such a difference to me that you didnt do it. You see, really and truly, apart from the things anyone can learn by the book and the proper way of speaking, and so on, there is a difference between a lady and a flower girl in not how she behaves, but how she's treated. I shall always be a flower girl to Professor Higgins, because he always treats me as a flower girl, and always will; but I know I can be a lady to you, because you always treat me as a lady, and always will.

MRS HIGGINS. Please dont grind your teeth, Henry.
PICKERING. Well, this really is very nice of you, Miss Doolittle.

PYGMALION

LIZA. I should like you to call me Eliza, now, if you would.
PICKERING. Thank you, Eliza, of course.
LIZA. And I should like Professor Higgins to call me Miss Doolittle.
HIGGINS. I'll see you damned first.

MRS. HIGGINS. Henry! Henry!

PICKERING [laughing] Why don't you slang back at him? Don't stand it. It would do him a lot of good.
LIZA. I can't. I could have done it once but now I can't go back to it. You told me, you know, that when a child is brought to a foreign country, it picks up the language in a few weeks, and forgets its own. Well, I am a child in your country. I have forgotten my own language, and can speak nothing but yours. That's the real break-off with the corner of Tottenham Court Road. Leaving Wimpole Street finishes it.

PICKERING [much alarmed] Oh! but you're coming back to Wimpole Street, aren't you? You'll forgive Higgins?

HIGGINS [ringing] Forgive! Will she, by George! Let her go. Let her find out how she can get on without us. She will relapse into the gutter in three weeks without me at her elbow.

Doolittle appears at the corner of the street. He comes slowly and shambly, in his dazed, fixed approach at Higgins, his arms loosely and idly hanging at his sides, his head tilted back to the wind, in unconsciousness of his approach.

PICKERING. He's incorrigible, Eliza. You won't relapse, will you?
LIZA. No; not now. Never again. I have learnt my lesson. I don't believe I could utter one of the old sounds if I tried. [Doolittle touches her on her left shoulder. She drops her work, losing her self-possession utterly at the spectacle of her father's splendor] A-a-a-a-ah-ow-oo!

PYGMALION

HIGGINS [with a crow of triumph] Aha! Just so. A-a-a-a-ah-ow-oo! A-a-a-a-ah-ow-oo! A-a-a-a-ah-ow-oo! Victory! Victory! [He throws himself on the divan, folding his arms, and spreading his legs].

DOOLITTLE. Can you blame the girl? Does look at me like that, Eliza. It aint my fault. I've come into some money. LIZA. You must have touched a millionaire this time, dad.

DOOLITTLE. I have. But I'm dressed something special today. I'm going to St George's, Hanover Square. Your stepmother is going to marry me.

LIZA [angrily] You're going to let yourself down to marry that low common woman!

PICKERING [guiltily] He ought to, Eliza. [To Doolittle] Why has she changed her mind?

DOOLITTLE [sadly] Intimidated, Governor. Intimidated. Middle class morality claims its victim. Won't you put on your hat, Eliza, and come and see me turned off?

LIZA. If the Colonel says I must, I - I'll [almost sobbing] I'll demean myself. And get insulted for my pains, like enough.

DOOLITTLE. Don't be afraid: she never comes to words with anyone now, poor woman! respectability has broke all the spirit out of her.

PICKERING [squeezing Eliza's elbow gently] Be kind to them, Eliza. Make the best of it.

LIZA [forcing a little smile for him through her vexation] Oh well, just to shew theres no ill feeling. I'll be back in a moment. [She goes out].

DOOLITTLE [sitting down beside Pickering] I feel uncommon nervous about the ceremony, Galton! I wish you'd come and see me through it.

PICKERING. But you've been through it before, man. You were married to Eliza's mother.

DOOLITTLE. Who told you that, sir? [In a whisper]
PICKERING. Well, nobody told me. But I concluded - naturally -

PYGMALION

DOOLITTLE. No; that aint the natural way, Colonel; it's only the middle class way. My way was always the un-deserving way. But dont say nothing to Eliza. She dont know: I always had a delicacy about telling her.

PICKERING. Quite right. We'll leave it so, if you dont mind. DOOLITTLE. And youll come to the church, Colonel, and put me through straight?

PICKERING. With pleasure. As far as a bachelor can.

MRS HIGGINS. May I come, Mr Doolittle? I should be very sorry to miss your wedding.

DOOLITTLE. I should indeed be honored by your con-descension, maam; and my poor old woman would take it as a tremenjous compliment. She's been very low, thinking of the happy days that are no more.

MRS HIGGINS [rising]. I'll order the carriage and get ready. [The men rise, except Higgins]. I shant be more than fifteen minutes. [As she goes to the door Eliza comes in, halting and buttoning her gloves]. I'm going to the church to see your father married, Eliza. You had better come in the brougham with me. Colonel Pickering can go on with the bridegroom.

Mrs Higgins goes out. Eliza comes to the middle of the room between the centre window and the ottoman. Pickering pins her. DOOLITTLE. Bridegroom! What a word! It makes a man realize his position, somehow. [He takes up his hat and goes towards the door].

PICKERING. Before I go, Eliza, do forgive Higgins and come back to us.

LIZA. I dont think dad would allow me. Wanted you, dad?

DOOLITTLE [and half magnanimous]. They played you off very cunning, Eliza, them two sportsmen. If it had been only one of them, you could have nailed him. But you see, there was two; and one of them chaperoned the other, as you might say. [To Pickering] It was artful of you, Colonel; but I bear no malice: I should have done the same myself. I been the victim of one woman after another all my life, and I dont grudge you two getting the better of Liza. I shant interfere. It's time for us to go, Colonel. So long, Henry. See you in St George's, Eliza. [He goes out].

PICKERING [leaving]. Do stay with us, Eliza. [He follows Doolittle].

Eliza goes out on the balcony to avoid being alone with Higgins. He rises and joins her there. She immediately comes back into the room and makes for the door; but he goes along the hall very quickly and gets his coat to the door before she reaches it.

HIGGINS. Well, Eliza, you're kind a bit of your own back, as you call it. Hav' you had enough? and are you going to be reasonable? Or do you want any more?

LIZA. You want me back only to pick up your slippers and put up with your tempers and fetch and carry for you.

HIGGINS. I havent said I wanted you back at all.

LIZA. Oh, indeed. Then what are we talking about?

HIGGINS. About you, not about me. If you come back I shall treat you just as I have always treated you. I can change my nature; and I dont intend to change my manners. My manners are exactly the same as Colonel Pickering's.

PYGMALION

PYGMALION

LIZA. Thats not true. He treats a flower girl as if she was a duchess.

HIGGINS. And I treat a duchess as if she was a flower girl, facing the window. The same to everybody.

LIZA. Like father.

HIGGINS. [Sitting, a little taken down] Without accepting the comparison at all points, Eliza, it's quite true that your father is not a snob, and that he will be quite at home in any station of life to which his eccentric destiny may call him. [Seriously] The great secret, Eliza, is not having bad manners or good manners or any other particular sort of manners, but having the same manner for all human souls; in short, behaving as if you were in Heaven, where there are no third-class carriages, and one soul is as good as another.

LIZA. Amen. You are a born preacher.

HIGGINS. [Initiated] The question is not whether I treat you rudely, but whether you ever heard me treat anyone else better.

LIZA. [with sudden sincerity] I dont care how you treat me. I dont mind your swearing at me. I shouldnt mind a black eye. Ive had one before this. But [standing up and facing him] I wont be passed over.

HIGGINS. Then let it of my way; for I wont stop for you. You talk about me as if I were a motor bus.

LIZA. So you are a motor bus; all bounce and go, and no consideration for anyone. But I can do without you. dont think I cant.

HIGGINS. I know you can. I told you you could.

LIZA. [wounded, getting away from him to the other side of the ottoman with her face in the depths] I knew you did, you brute. You wanted to get rid of me.

HIGGINS. Liar.

LIZA. Thank you. [She sits down with dignity].

HIGGINS. You never asked yourself, I suppose, whether I could do without you.

LIZA. [seriously] Dont you try to get round me. Youll have to do without me.

HIGGINS. [surprised] I can do without anybody. I have my own soul: my own spark of divine fire. But [with sudden humility] I shall miss you, Eliza. [He sits down near her on the ottoman]. I have learnt something from your idiotic notions: I confess that humbly and gratefully. And I have grown accustomed to your voice and appearance. I like them, rather.

LIZA. Well, you have both of them on your gramophone and in your book of photographs. When you feel lonely without me, you can turn the machine on. It's got no feelings to hurt.

HIGGINS. I cant turn yoursoulon. Leave me those feelings; and you can take away the voice and the face. They are not you.

LIZA. Oh, you are a devil. You can twist the heart in a girl as easy as some could twist her arms to hurt her. Mrs Pearce warned me. Time and again she has wanted to leave you; and you always got round her at the last minute. And you dont care a bit for her. And you dont care a bit for me.

HIGGINS. I care for life, for humanity; and you are a part of it that has come my way and been built into my house.

What more can you or anyone ask?

LIZA. I wont care for anybody that doesnt care for me.

HIGGINS. Commercial principles, Eliza. Like [reproducing her Covent Garden pronunciation with professional exactness] s'vollin violets [selling violets], isnt it?

LIZA. Dont sneer at me. Its mean to sneer at me.

HIGGINS. I have never sneered in my life. Sneering doesnt become either the human face or the human soul. I am criticising my righteous contempt for Commercialism. I dont and wont trade in affection. You call me a brute because you couldnt buy a claim on me by fetching my slippers and finding my spectacles. You were a fool: I think a woman fetching a man's slippers is a disgusting sight: did I ever fetch your slippers? I think a good deal more of you for throwing them in my face. No use slaving for me and then saying you want to be cared for: who cares for a slave? If you come back, come back for the sake of good fellowship; for you'll get nothing else. You've had a thousand times as much out of me as I have out of you; and if you dare to set up your little dog's tricks of fetching and carrying slippers against my creation of a Duchess Eliza, I'll slam the door in your silly face.

LIZA. What did you do it for if you didn't care for me?

HIGGINS [heartily] Why, because it was my job.

LIZA. You never thought of the trouble it would make for me.

HIGGINS. Would the world ever have been made if its maker had been afraid of making trouble? Making life means making trouble. There's only one way of escaping trouble; and that's killing things. Cowards, you notice, are always shrieking to have troublesome people killed. LIZA. I'm no preacher: I don't notice things like that. I notice that you don't notice me.

HIGGINS [jumping up and walking about intolerantly] Eliza: you're an idiot. I waste the treasures of my Miltonic mind by spreading them before you. Once for all, understand that I go my way and do my work without caring two pence what happens to either of us. So you can come like your father and your stepmother. So you can come back or go to the devil: which you please.

LIZA. What am I to come back for?

HIGGINS [clenching his fist on the ottoman and leaning over it to her] For the fun of it. That's why I took you on. LIZA [with arched face] And you may throw me out tomorrow if I don't do everything you want me to?

HIGGINS. Yes; and you may walk out tomorrow if I don't do everything you want me to.

PYGMALION

LIZA. And live with my stepmother?

HIGGINS. Yes, or sell flowers.

LIZA. Oh! if I only could go back to my flower basket! I should be independent of both you and father and all the world! Why did you take my independence from me? Why did I give it up? I'm a slave now, for all my fine clothes. HIGGINS. Not a bit. I'll adopt you as my daughter and settle money on you if you like. Or would you rather marry Pickering?

LIZA [looking friendly round at him] I wouldn't marry you if you asked me; and you're nearer my age than what he is. HIGGINS [gently] Than he is: not 'than what he is'.

LIZA [losing her temper and rising] I'll talk as I like. You're not my teacher now.

HIGGINS [relaxedly] I don't suppose Pickering would, though. He's as confirmed an old bachelor as I am.

LIZA. Thats not what I want; and dont you think it. I've always had chaps enough wanting me that way. Freddy Hill writes to me twice and three times a day, sheets and sheets.

HIGGINS [disagreeably surprised] Damn his impudence! [He revolts and finds himself sitting on his heels].

LIZA. He has a right to if he likes, poor lad. And he does love me.

HIGGINS [getting off the ottoman] You have no right to encourage him.

LIZA. Every girl has a right to be loved.

HIGGINS. What: by tools like that?

LIZA. Freddy's not a fool. And if he's weak and poor and wants me, may be he'd make me happier than my letters that daily me and great want me.

HIGGINS. Can he make anything of you? That's the point. LIZA. Perhaps I could make a better one of him. But I never thought of us making anything of each other; and you never think of anything else. I only want to be natural.

PYGMALION

HIGGINS. In short, you want me to be as infatuated about you as Freddy? Is that it?

LIZA. No I dont. Thats not the sort of feeling I want from you. And dont you be too sure of yourself or of me. I could have been a bad girl if I'd liked. I've seen more of some things than you, for all your learning. Girls like me can drag gentlemen down to make love to them easy enough. And they wish each other dead the next minute.

HIGGINS. Of course they do. Then what in thunder are we quarrelling about?

LIZA [much troubled] I want a little kindness. I know I'm a common ignorant girl, and you a book-learned gentleman; but I'm not dirt under your feet. What I done [correcting herself] what I did was not for the dresses and the taxis: I did it because we were pleasant together and I come - came - to care for you; not to want you to make love to me, and not forgetting the difference between us, but more friendly like?

HIGGINS. Well, of course. Thats just how I feel. And how Pickering feels. Eliza: youre a fool.

LIZA. Thats not a proper answer to give me [she sinks on the chair at the writing-table in tears].

HIGGINS. Its all youll get until you stop bring a common idiot. If youre going to be a lady, youll have to give up feeling neglected if the men you know dont spend half their time sivelling over you and the other half giving you black eyes. If you cant stand the creatures of my sort of life, and the strain of it, go back to the gutter. Work til youre more a brute than a human being; and then cuddle and squabble and drink til you cant sleep. Oh, its a fine life, the life of the gutter. Its real: its warm: its violent: you can feel it through the thickest skin. You can taste it and smell it without any training or any work. Not like Science and Literature and Classical Music and Philosophy and Art. You find me cold, unfeeling, selfish, dont you? Very well: be off with you to the sort of people you like. Marry some sentimental hog or other with lots of money, and a thick pair of lips to kiss you with and a thick pair of boots to kick you with. If you cant appreciate what youve got, youd better get what you can appreciate.

LIZA. [desperately] Oh, you are a cruel tyrant. I cant talk to you: you turn everything against me: I'm always in the wrong. But you know very well all the time what you're nothing but a bully. You know I cant go back to the gutter, as you call it, and that I have no real friends in the world but you and the Colonel. You know well I couldn't bear to live with a low common man after you two; and its wicked and cruel of you to insult me by pretending I could. You think I must go back to Wimpole Street because I have nowhere else to go but father's. But dont you be too sure that you have me under your feet to be trampled on and talked down. I'll marry Freddy, I will, assoon as I'm able to support him.

HIGGINS [thunderstruck] Freddy!!! that young fool! That poor devil who couldnt get a job as an errand boy even if he had the guts to try for it! Woman: do you not understand that I have made you a consort for a king?

LIZA. Freddy loves me: that makes him king enough for me. I dont want him to work: he wasnt brought up to it as I was. I'll go and be a teacher.

HIGGINS. Whatt you teach, in heaven's name?

LIZA. What you taught me. I'll teach phonetics.

HIGGINS. Ha! ha! ha!

LIZA. I'll offer myself as an assistant to that hairyfaced Hungarian.

HIGGINS [whining fury] 'Wot at! Thats my master! Thats my master! that toadying ignoramus! Teach him my methods! my discoveries! You take one step in his direction and I'll wring your neck. [He lays hands on her] Do you hear? LIZA [defiantly non-resistant] Wrting away. What do I care? I knew you'd strike me some day. [He lets her go, stamping with rage at having forgotten himself, and recols so hastily that he stumbles back into his seat on the ottoman.] Aha! Now I know how to deal with you. What a fool I was not to think of it before! You can't take away the knowledge you gave me. You said I had a finer ear than you. And I can be civil and kind to people, which is more than you can. Ahai! [Purposely dropping her aitches to annoy him] Thats done you, Henry Higgins, it az. Now I dont care that [snapping her fingers] for your bullying and your big talk. I'll advertize it in the papers that your duchess is only a flower girl that you taught, and that she'll teach anybody to be a duchess just the same in six months for a thousand guineas. Oh, when I think of myself crawling under your feet and being trampled on and called names, when all the time I had only to lift up my finger to be as good as you, I could just kick myself.

HIGGINS [wondering at her] You damned impudent slut, you! But it's better than snivelling; better than fetching slippers and finding spectacles, isn't it? [Rising] By George, Eliza, I said I'd make a woman of you; and I have. I like you like this.

LIZA. Yes: you turn round and make up to me now that I'm not afraid of you, and can do without you.

HIGGINS. Of course I do, you little fool. Five minutes ago you were like a millstone round my neck. Now you're a tower of strength: a consort battleship. You and I and Pickering will be three old bachelors instead of only two men and a silly girl.

Mrs Higgins returns, dressed for the wedding. Eliza instantly becomes cool and elegant.

MRS HIGGINS. The carriage is waiting, Eliza. Are you ready?

LIZA. Quite. Is the Professor coming?

MRS HIGGINS. Certainly not. He can't behave himself in church. He makes remarks out loud all the time on the clergyman's pronunciation.

PYGMALION

LIZA. Then I shall not see you again, Professor. Goodbye.

[She goes to the door.]

MRS HIGGINS [coming to Higgins] Higgins, dear. [He is about to kiss her, when he recalls something.] Oh, by the way, Eliza, order a ham and a Stilton cheese, will you? And buy me a pair of reindeer gloves, number eights, and a tie to match that new suit of mine. You can choose the color. [His cheerful, careless, vigorous voice shows that he is incorrigible.]

LIZA. [disdainfully] Number eights are too small for you, if you want them lined with lamb's wool. You have three new ties that you have forgotten in the drawer of your washstand. Colonel Pickering prefers double Gloucester to Stilton; and you don't notice the difference. I telephoned Mrs Pearce this morning not to forget the ham. What you are to do without me I cannot imagine. [She sweeps out.] MRS HIGGINS. I'm afraid you've spoilt that girl, Henry. I should be uneasy about you and her if she were less fond of Colonel Pickering.

HIGGINS. Nonsense! Nonsense: she's going to marry Freddy. Ha ha! Freddy! Freddy!! Ha ha ha ha ha!!! [He roars with laughter as the play ends].

The rest of the story need not be shown in action, and indeed, would hardly need telling if our imaginations were not so infected by their very dependence on the ready-mades and reach-me-downs of the ragshop in which Romance keeps its stock of 'happy endings' to misfit all stories. Now, the history of Eliza Doolittle, though called a romance because the transfiguration it records seems exceedingly improbable, is common enough. Such transfigurations have been achieved by hundreds of resolutely ambitious young women since Nell Gwynne set them the example by playing queens and fascinating kings in the theatre in which she began by selling oranges. Nevertheless, people in all directions have assumed, for no other reason than that she became the heroine of a romance, that she must have married the hero of it. This is unbearable, not only because her little drama, if acted on such a thoughtless assumption, must be spoiled, but because the true sequel is patent to anyone with a sense of human nature in general, and of feminine instinct in particular.

Eliza, in telling Higgins she would not marry him if he asked, was not coqueting: she was announcing a well-considered decision. When a bachelor interests, and dominates, and teaches, and becomes important to a spinster, as Higgins with Eliza, she always, if she has character enough to be capatitive of it, considers very seriously indeed whether she will play for becoming that bachelor's wife, especially if he is so little interested in marriage that a determined and devoted woman might capture him if she set herself resolutely to do it. Her decision will depend a good deal on whether she is really free to do so, and that, again, will depend on her age and income. If she is at the end of her youth, and has no security for her livelihood, she will marry him because she must marry anybody who will provide for her. But at Eliza's age a good-looking girl does not feel that pressure: she feels free to pick and choose. She is therefore guided by her instinct in the matter. Eliza's instinct tells her not to marry Higgins. It does not tell her to give him up. It is not in the slightest doubt as to his remaining one of the strongest personal interests in her life. It would be very sorely strained if there was another woman likely to supplant her with him. But as she feels sure of him on that last point, she has no doubt at all as to her course, and would not have any, even if the difference of twenty years in age, which seems so great to youth, did not exist between them.

As our own instincts are not appealed to by her conclusion, let us see whether we cannot discover some reason in it. When Higgins excused his indifference to young women on the ground that they had an irresistible rival in his mother, he gave the clue to his inveterate old-bachelorism. The case is uncommon only to the extent that remarkable mothers are uncommon. If an imaginative boy has a sufficiently rich mother who has intelligence, personal grace, dignity of character without harshness, and a cultivated sense of the best art of her time to enable her to make her house beautiful, she sets a standard for him against which very few women can struggle, besides effecting for him a disengagement of his affections, his sense of beauty, and his idealism from his specifically sexual impulses. This makes him a standing puzzle to the huge number of uncultivated people who have been brought up in tasteless homes by commonplace or disagreeable parents, and to whom, consequently, literature, painting, sculpture, music, and affectionate personal relations come as modes of sex if they come at all. The word passion means nothing else to them; and that Higgins could have a passion for phonetics and idealize his mother instead of Eliza, would seem to them absurd and unnatural. Nevertheless, when we look round and see that hardly anyone is too ugly or disagreeable to find a wife or a husband if he or she wants one, whilst many old maids and bachelors are above the average in quality and culture, we cannot help suspecting that the disentanglement of sex from the associations with which it is so commonly confused, a disengagement which persons of genius achieve by sheer intellectual analysis, is sometimes produced or aided by parental fascination.

Now, though Eliza was incapable of thus explaining to herself Higgins's formidable powers of resistance to the charm that prostrated Freddy at the first glance, she was instinctively aware that she could never obtain a complete grip of him, or come between him and his mother (the first necessity of the married woman). To put it shortly, she knew that for some mysterious reason he had not the makings of a married man in him, according to her conception of a husband as one to whom she would be his nearest and fondest and warmest interest. Even had there been no mother-rival, she would still have refused to accept an interest in herself that was secondary to philosophic interests. Had Mrs Higgins died, there would still have been Milton and the Universal Alphabet. Landor's remark that to those who have the greatest power of loving, love is a secondary affair, would not have recommended Landor to Eliza. Put that along with her resentment of Higgins's domineering superiority, and her mistrust of his coaxing cleverness in getting round her and evading her wrath when he had gone too far with his impetuous bullying, and you will see that Eliza's instinct had good grounds for warning her not to marry her Pygmalion. "And how, whom did Eliza marry? For if Higgins was a predestinate old bachelor, she was most certainly not a pre-destinate old maid. Well, that can be told very shortly to those who have not guessed it from the indications she has herself given them.

Almost immediately after Eliza is stung into proclaiming her considered determination not to marry Higgins, she mentions the fact that young Mr Frederick Eynsford Hill is pouring out his love for her daily through the post. Now Freddy is young, practically twenty years younger than Higgins: he is a gentleman (or, as Eliza would qualify him, a toff), and speaks like one. He is nicely dressed, is treated by the Colonel as an equal, loves her unaffectedly, and is not her master, nor ever likely to dominate her in spite of his advantage of social standing. Eliza has no use for the foolish romantic tradition that all women love to be mastered, if not actually bullied and beaten. 'When you go to women' says Nietzsche 'take your whip with you.' Sensible despots have long confined that precaution to women: they have taken their whips with them when they have dealt with men, and been slavishly idealized by the men over whom they have flourished the whip much more than by women. No doubt there are slavish women as well as slavish men; and women, like men, admire those that are stronger than themselves. But to admire a strong person and to live under that strong person's thumb are two different things. The weak may not be admired and hero-worshipped; but they are by no means disliked or shunned; and they never seem to have the least difficulty in marrying people who are too good for them. They may fail in emergencies; but life is not one long emergency; it is mostly a string of situations for which no exceptional strength is needed, and with which even rather weak people can cope if they have a stronger partner to help them out. Accordingly, it is a truth everywhere in evidence that strong people, masculine or feminine, not only do not marry stronger people, but do not shew any preference for them in selecting their friends. When a lion meets another with a louder roar 'the first lion thinks the last a bore'. The man or woman who feels strong enough for two, seeks for every other quality in a partner than strength.

The converse is also true. Weak people want to marry strong people who do not frighten them too much; and this often leads them to make the mistake we describe metaphorically as 'biting off more than they can chew'. They want too much for too little; and when the bargain is unreasonable beyond all bearing, the union becomes impossible: it ends in the weaker party being either discarded or borne as a cross, which is worse. People who are not only weak, but silly or obtuse as well, are often in these difficulties. This being the state of human affairs, what is Eliza fairly sure to do when she is placed between Freddy and Higgins?

Will she look forward to a lifetime of fetching Higgins's slippers or to a lifetime of Freddy fetching hers? There can be no doubt about the answer. Unless Freddy is biologically repulsive to her, and Higgins biologically attractive to a degree that overwhelms all her other instincts, she will, if she marries either of them, marry Freddy.

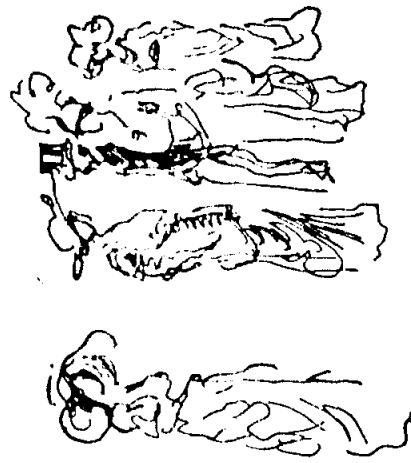

And that is just what Eliza did.

Complications ensued; but they were economic, not romantic. Freddy had no money and no occupation. His mother's jointure, a last relic of the opulence of Largehad Park, had enabled her to struggle along in EarlsCourt with an air of gentility, but not to procure any serious secondary education for her children, much less give the boy a profession. A clerkship at thirty shillings a week was beneath Freddy's dignity, and extremely distasteful to him besides. His prospects consisted of a hope that if he kept up appearances somebody would do something for him. The same thing appeared vaguely to his imagination as a private secretaryship or a sinecure of some sort. To his mother it perhaps appeared as a marriage to some lady of means who could not resist her boy's niceness. Fancy her feelings when he married a flower girl who had become disclassed under extraordinary circumstances which were now notorious!

It is true that Eliza's situation did not seem wholly ineligible. Her father, though formerly a dustman, and now fantastically disclassed, had become extremely popular in the smartest society by a social talent which triumphed over every prejudice and every disadvantage. Rejected by the middle class, which he loathed, he had shot up at once into the highest circles by his wit, his dustmanship (which he carried like a banner), and his Nietzschean transcendence of good and evil. At intimate ducal dinners he sat on the right hand of the Duchess; and in country houses he smoked in the pantry and was made much of by the butler when he was not feeding in the dining room and being salted by cabinet ministers. But he found it almost as hard to do all this on four thousand a year as Mrs Eynsford Hill to live in EarlsCourt on an income so pitifully smaller that I have not the heart to disclose its exact figure. He absolutely refused to add the last straw to his burden by contributing to Eliza's support.

Thus Freddy and Eliza, now Mr and Mrs Eynsford Hill, would have spent a penniless honeymoon but for a wedding present of £500 from the Colonel to Eliza. It lasted a long time because Freddy did not know how to spend money, never having had any to spend, and Eliza, socially trained by a pair of old bachelors, wore her clothes as long as they held together and looked pretty, without the least regard to their being many months out of fashion. Still, £500 will not last two young people for ever; and they both knew, and Eliza felt as well, that they must shift for themselves in the end. She could quarter herself on Wimpole Street because it had come to be her home; but she was quite aware that she ought not to quarter Freddy there, and that it would not be good for his character if she did.

Not that the Wimpole Street bachelors objected. When she consulted them, Higgins declined to be bothered about her housing problem when that solution was so simple. Eliza's desire to have Freddy in the house with her seemed of no more importance than if she had wanted an extra piece of bedroom furniture. Pleas as to Freddy's character, and the moral obligation on him to earn his own living, were lost on Higgins. He denied that Freddy had any character, and declared that if he tried to do any useful work some competent person would have the trouble of undoing it: a procedure involving a net loss to the community, and great unhappiness to Freddy himself, who was obviously intended by Nature for such light work as amusing Eliza, which, Higgins declared, was a much more useful and honorable occupation than working in the city. When Eliza referred again to her project of teaching phonetics, Higgins abated not a jot of his violent opposition to it. He said she was not within ten years of being qualified to meddle with his pet subject; and as it was evident that the Colonel agreed with him, she felt she could not go against them in this grave matter, and that she had no right, without Higgins's consent, to exploit the knowledge he had given her; for his knowledge seemed to her as much his private property as his watch. Eliza was no communist. Besides, she was superstitiously devoted to them both, more entirely and frankly after her marriage than before it.

It was the Colonel who finally solved the problem, which had cost him much perplexed cogitation. He one day asked Eliza, rather shyly, whether she had quite given up her notion of keeping a flower shop. She replied that she had thought of it, but had put it out of her head, because the Colonel had said, that day at Mrs Higgins's, that it would never do. The Colonel confessed that when he said that, he had not quite recovered from the dazzling impression of the day before. They broke the matter to Higgins that evening. The sole comment vouchsafed by him very nearly led to a serious quarrel with Eliza. It was to the effect that she would have in Freddy an ideal crand boy.

Freddy himself was next sounded on the subject. He said he had been thinking of a shop himself; though it had presented itself to his pennilessness as a small place in which Eliza should sell tobacco at one counter whilst he sold news-papers at the opposite one. But he agreed that it would be extraordinarily jolly to go early every morning with Eliza to Covent Garden and buy flowers on the scene of their first meeting: a sentiment which earned him many kisses from his wife. He added that he had always been afraid to propose anything of the sort, because Clara would make an awful row about a step that must damage her matrimonial chances, and his mother could not be expected to like it after clinging for so many years to that step of the social ladder on which retail trade is impossible.

and mimicked in West Kensington like everybody else there, she was accepted as a rational and normal - or shall we say inevitable? - sort of human being. At worst they called her The Pusher; but to them no more than to herself had it ever occurred that she was pushing the air, and pushing it in a wrong direction. Still, she was not happy. She was growing desperate. Her one asset, the fact that her mother was what the Lipsom grocer called a carriage lady, had no exchange value, apparently. It had prevented her from getting educated, because the only education she could have afforded was education with the EarlsCourt green grocer's daughter. It had led her to seek the society of her mother's class; and that class simply would not have her, because she was much poorer than the grocer, and, far from being able to afford a maid, could not afford even a housemaid, and had to scrape along at home with an illiberally treated general servant. Under such circumstances nothing could give her an air of being a genuine product of LargeLady Park. And yet its tradition made her regard a marriage with anyone within her reach as an unbearable humiliation. Commercial people and professional people in a small way were odious to her. She ran after painters and novelists; but she did not charm them; and her bold attempts to pick up and practise artistic and literary talk irritated them. She was, in short, an utter failure, an ignorant, incompetent, pretentious, unwelcome, penniless, useless little snob; and though she did not admit these disqualifications (for nobody ever faces unpleasant truths of this kind until the possibility of a way out dawns on them) she felt their effects too keenly to be satisfied with her position.

Poor Clara, who appeared to Higgins and his mother as a disagreeable and ridiculous person, and to her own mother as in some inexplicable way a social failure, had never seen herself in either light; for, though to some extent ridiculed and mimicked in West Kensington like everybody else there, she was accepted as a rational and normal - or shall we say inevitable? - sort of human being. Clara had a startling eye-opener when, on being suddenly

"wakened to enthusiasm by a girl of her own age who dazzled her and produced in her a gushing desire to take her for a model, and gain her friendship, she discovered that this exquisite apparition had graduated from the gutter in a few months time. It shook her so violently, that when Mr H. G. Wells lifted her on the point of his puissant pen, and placed her at the angle of view from which the life she was leading and the society to which she clung appeared in its true relation to real human needs and worthy social structure, he effected a conversion and a conviction of sin comparable to the most sensational feats of General Booth or Gypsy Smith. Clara's snobbery went bang. Life suddenly began to move with her. Without knowing how or why, she began to make friends and enemies. Some of the acquaintances to whom she had been a tedious or indifferent or ridiculous affliction, dropped her; others became cordial. To her amazement she found that some 'quite nice' people were saturated with Wells, and that this accessibility to ideas was the secret of their niceness. People she had thought deeply religious, and had tried to conciliate on that tack with disastrous results, suddenly took an interest in her, and revealed a hostility to conventional religion which she had never conceived possible except among the most desperate characters. They made her read Galsworthy; and Galsworthy exposed the vanity of Large lady Park and finisred it to exasperated her to think that the "manger" in which she had languished for so many unhappy years had been unlocked all the time, and that the impulses she had so carefully struggled with and stifled for the sake of keeping well with society, were precisely those by which alone she could have come into any sort of sincere human contact. In the radiance of these discoveries, and the tumult of their reaction,

"she made a fool of herself as freely and conspicuously as when she so rashly adopted Eliza's eruptive in Mrs Higgins's drawing room; for the new-born Wellians had to find her bearings almost as ridiculously as a baby; but nobody hates a baby for its ineptitudes, or thinks the worse of it for trying to eat the matches; and Clara lost no friends by her follies. They laughed at her to her face this time; and she had to defend herself and fight it out as best she could.

"When Freddy paid a visit to EarlsCourt (which he never did when he could possibly help it) to make the desolating announcement that he and his Eliza were thinking of blackening the Large lady scutcheon by opening a shop, he found the little household already convulsed by a prior announcement from Clara that she also was going to work in an old furniture shop in Dover Street, which had been started by a fellow Wellian. This appointment Clara owed, after all, to her old social accomplishment of Push. She had made up her mind that, cost what it might, she would see Mr Wells in the flesh; and she had achieved her end at a garden party. She had better luck than so rash an enterprise deserved. Mr Wells came up to her expectations. Age had not withered him, nor could custom stale his infinite variety in half an hour.

"His pleasant neatness and compactness, his small hands and feet, his teeming ready brain, his unaffected accessibility, and a certain fine aristocratic air which stamped him as susceptible for an hour to his tip-most toe, proved irresistible. Clara talked of nothing else for weeks and weeks afterwards. And as she happened to talk to the lady of the furniture shop, and the lady also desired above all things to know Mr Wells and sell pretty things to him, she offered Clara a job on the chance of achieving that end through her. And so it came about that Eliza's luck held, and the expected opposition to the flower shop melted away. The shop is in the arcade of a railway station not very far from the Victoria and Albert Museum; and if you live in that neighbourhood you may go there any day and buy a buttonhole from Eliza.

Now here is a last opportunity for romance. Would you not like to be assured that the shop was an immense success, thanks to Eliza's charms and her early business experience in Covent Garden? Alas! the truth is the truth: the shop did not pay for a long time, simply because Eliza and her Freddy did not know how to keep it. True, Eliza had not to begin at the very beginning: she knew the names and prices of the cheaper flowers; and her elation was unbounded when she found that Freddy, like all youths educated at cheap, pretentious, and thoroughly inefficient schools, knew a little Latin. It was very little, but enough to make him appear to her a Porson or Bentley, and to put him at his ease with botanical nomenclature. Unfortunately he knew nothing else; and Eliza, though she could count money up to eighteen shillings or so, and had acquired a certain familiarity with the language of Milton from her struggles to qualify herself for winning Higgins's bet, could not write out a bill without utterly disgracing the establishment. Freddy's power of stating in Latin that Balbus built a wall and that Gaul was divided into three parts did not carry with it the slightest knowledge of accounts or business: Colonel Pickering had to explain to him what a cheque book and a bank account meant. And the pair were by no means easily teachable. Freddy backed up Eliza in her obstinate refusal to believe that they could save money by engaging a bookkeeper with some knowledge of the business. How, they argued, could you possibly save money by going to extra expense when you already could not make both ends meet? But the Colonel, after making the ends meet over and over again, at last gently insisted; and Eliza, humbled to the dust by having to beg from him so often, and stung by the uproarious derision of Higgins, to whom the notion of Freddy succeeding at anything was a joke that never palled, grasped the fact that business, like phonetics, has to be learned.

On the pittoresque spectacle of the pair spending their evenings in shorthand schools and polytechnic classes, learning bookkeeping and typewriting with incipient junior clerks, male and female, from the elementary schools, let me not dwell. There were even classes at the London School of Economics, and a humble personal appeal to the director of that institution to recommend a course bearing on the flower business. He, being a humorist, explained to them the method of the celebrated Dickensian essay on Chinese Metaphysics by the gentleman who read an article on China and an article on Metaphysics and combined the information. He suggested that they should combine the London School with Kew Gardens. Eliza, to whom the procedure of the Dickensian gentleman seemed perfectly correct (as in fact it was) and not in the least funny (which was only her ignorance), took the advice with entire gravity. But the effort that cost her the deepest humiliation was a request to Higgins, whose pet artistic fancy, next to Milton's verse, was calligraphy, and who himself "wrote a most beautiful Italian hand, that he would teach her to write. He declared that she was congenitally incapable of following a single letter worthy of the least of Milton's words; but she persisted; and again he suddenly threw himself into the task of teaching her with a combination of stormy intensity, concentrated patience, and occasional bursts of interesting discussion on the beauty and nobility, the august mission and destiny, of human handwriting. Eliza ended by acquiring an extremely uncommercial script which was a positive extension of her personal beauty, and spending three times as much on stationery as anyone else because certain qualities and shapes of paper became indispensable to her. She could not even address an envelope in the usual way because it made the margins all wrong.

Their commercial schooldays were a period of disgrace and despair for the young couple. They seemed to be learning nothing about flower shops. At last they gave it up as hopeless, and shook the dust of the shorthand schools, and the polytechnic, and the London School of Economics from their feet for ever. Besides, the business was in some serious way beginning to take care of itself. They had somehow forgotten their objections to employing other people. Lucy came to the conclusion that their own way was the best, and that they had really a remarkable talent for business. The Colonel, who had been compelled for some years to keep a sufficient sum on current account at his bankers to make up their deficits, found that the provision was unnecessary: the young people were prospering. It is true that there was not quite fair play between them and their competitors in trade. Their week-ends in the country cost them nothing, and saved them the price of their Sunday dinners; for the motor car was the Colonel's; and he and Higgins paid the hotel bills. Mr F. Hill, florist and grocer, they soon discovered that there was money in asparagus; and asparagus led to other vegetables, bread and air which stamped the business as classy; and in private life it was still Frederick Eynsford Hill, Esquire. Not that there was any swank about him: nobody but Eliza knew that he had been christened Frederick Challoner. Eliza herself swanked like anything. That is all. That is how it has turned out. It is astonishing how much Eliza still manages to meddle in the housekeeping at Wimpole Street in spite of the shop and her own family. And it is notable that though she never nags her husband, and frankly loves the Colonel as if she were his favorite daughter, she has never got out of the habit of nagging Higgins that was established on the fatal night when she won his bet for him. She snaps his head off on the faintest provocation, or on none. He no longer dares to tease her by assuming an abysmal inferiority of Freddy's mind to his own. He storms and bullies and derides; but she stands up to him so ruthlessly that the Colonel has to ask her from time to time to be kinder to Higgins; and it is the only request of his that brings a mulish expression into her face. Nothing but some emergency or calamity great enough to break down all likes and dislikes, and throw them both back on their common humanity — and may they be spared any such trial! — will ever alter this. She knows that Higgins does not need her, just as her father did not need her. The very scruples which he told her that day that he had become used to having her there, and dependent on her for all sorts of little services, and that he should miss her if she went away (it would never have occurred to Freddy or the Colonel to say anything of the sort) deepens her inner certainty that she is 'no more to him than them slippers'; yet she has a sense, too, that his indifference is deeper than the infatuation of commoner souls. She is immensely interested in him. She has every year or two or three moments in which she wishes she could get him alone, on a desert island, away from all ties and world trouble, else in the world to consider, and just drag him off his pedestal and see him making love like any common man. We all have private imaginations of that sort. But when it comes to business, to the life that she really leads as distinguished from the life of dreams and fancies, she likes Freddy and she likes the Colonel; and she does not like Higgins and Mr Doolittle. Galatea never does quite like Pygmalion: his relation to her is too godlike to be altogether agreeable.

154
